PREFACE

THE aim of the present Commentary is to explain the prophets, whose writings it embraces, in the light of history, to make their words intelligible to modern readers, so far as our knowledge enables us to do so, in the sense which they conveyed to those who first heard or read them. This I understand to be the primary duty of a Commentary on the poetical or prophetic writings of the Old Testament, and to be the intention of the volumes in the present series. The gifted men of old who spake, 'being borne along by the Holy Ghost,' were, each and all, the children of their own times : each had his own distinctive individuality, but each, as he spoke or wrote, had his eye steadily fixed on the questions of national interest prominent at the time, on the social, moral, or religious needs of his fellow countrymen, on contemporary political movements in the world outside ; each either judged the present, or looked out into the future, from the standpoint of his own age. Neither the prophets' judgements on their contemporaries, nor the great ideals which they project upon the future, can be rightly understood without reference to the influences under which they wrote, the moral and spiritual atmosphere in which they lived, the practical questions with which they had to deal : and hence the extreme importance of ascertaining, as fully as is possible, the historical conditions under which each prophecy was delivered, and which,—saving, of course, the individuality of the author,—determined essentially its character and scope. I have accordingly made it my endeavour to bring out the distinctive historical position and significance of each of the prophets with whom, in the present volume, I have had to deal. Of course, at the same time, the writings of the prophets abound in elements of permanent value: the great principles of religion and morality which they proclaim, and which they also make the basis of their ideals, are applicable to all time. Where occasion required it, I hope that I have not been neglectful in calling attention to this aspect of the prophets' writings; but homiletical or devotional reflections, not strictly contained in the prophets' words, but only suggested by them, or capable of being developed out of them, I considered to lie beyond the scope of this Commentary. For these, references must be made to the larger Commentaries of Dr. Pusey and Professor G. A. Smith. The former of these, a work of monumental erudition, not only contains many valuable notes on questions of Hebrew philology and other departments of learned research, but abounds especially in devotional and homiletical expansions of the prophets' thought, partly the ripened fruit of the venerable author's own long spiritual experience, partly collected by him, with his wonted learning and industry, from the stores accumulated by the piety of older divines. Professor Smith's work, which is written from a more modern point of view, while doing full justice to the claims of critical and historical exegesis, displays warm sympathy with the prophets' spirit, and contains many fresh and suggestive applications adapted to the circumstances of the present day. The two most recent exegetical Commentaries on the Minor Prophets, to both of which I must acknowledge my obligations, are those by Nowack and Marti; and the reader who desires further information upon difficult points of criticism and exegesis must, in addition to Professor Smith's volumes, consult these, without at the same time forgetting the older, but still very often useful, Commentary of C. F. Keil. Wellhausen's Die kleinen Propheten, though not a complete Commentary, is marked by its author's usual insight and cleverness, and is a valuable contribution to the exegesis of the Minor Prophets. On Zechariah also, Dr. C. H. H. Wright's Zechariah and his Prophecies (the 'Bampton Lectures' for 1878), with critical and grammatical notes, may often be serviceably consulted.

The scale of the present Commentary has precluded, as a rule, a detailed discussion of difficult or controverted points, whether of criticism or exegesis: I have, however, wherever possible, endeavoured to give the reader an indication of the grounds for the conclusions adopted. The Revised Version, superior as it is in clearness and accuracy to the Authorized Version, and though sufficient as a rule for ordinary purposes, not unfrequently contains passages in which the sense of the original might be more closely expressed: in such cases, where it seemed to be of sufficient importance to do so, I have naturally given the more exact rendering in the notes. In places where the catch-words (in heavy type) at the beginning of a note differ from the text of the Revised Version, the variation is intentional, and is designed for the purpose of expressing the force of the Hebrew more exactly. From time to time I have also introduced Hebrew words into the notes—though not, I hope, in such a way as to make the notes less easy for an ordinary reader to understand—partly for the benefit of such readers as may be students of Hebrew, and partly, in the case of emendations, in order that even those unacquainted with Hebrew may see for themselves how slight in many cases the textual change involved is.

The reader who desires to understand the Revised Version must not forget that it has inherited from the Authorized Version many archaisms, or words used in now obsolete or unfamiliar senses, which, unless he happens to be an expert in Old English, will either convey no definite meaning to him, or else mislead him by suggesting an incorrect meaning. In the books included in the present volume there are nearly forty such expressions,—alarm, base, brass, cieled, coast, discover, fair, meat, table, vile may be instanced, all used in senses now practically unknown. I have made it a point to explain these words to the reader, and have also collected them all in the Index<sup>1</sup>.

Difficulties and obscurities arise sometimes in the prophets from our imperfect knowledge of the incidents and circumstances alluded to : but they are due more frequently to corruption of the text. From internal evidence it is clear that there are many passages in the Old Testament in which the Hebrew text has not been transmitted to us intact : in such cases it can be sometimes restored, with moral certainty, from the ancient Versions (which represent MSS. many centuries older than the oldest Hebrew MSS. which we possess), sometimes, either with equal moral certainty or with great probability, by conjecture ; sometimes, on the other hand, a certain or convincing restoration appears to be impossible. The margins of the Revised Version note a limited number of readings from the ancient Versions, which in most cases are unquestionably to be regarded as more original than those of the present Hebrew text ; but it did not fall within the scope of the Revisers' work to notice more than some of the clearest and most important cases. In the opinion of the best modern Hebrew scholars there are numerous other passages in which the Hebrew text both needs emendation, and can, with very great probability, be emended, whether from the ancient Versions or by conjecture. I have naturally mentioned in the notes such emendations, belonging to either of these classes, as seemed to me to be worthy of adoption, or at least, writers. See also the respective words in Hastings' Dict. of the Bible, where also they are usually fully illustrated and explained.

in a few cases, to be probable enough to deserve consideration. Here also I have made it my endeavour to state the facts in such a way that the necessity, or probability, of the proposed emendation may be apparent to the reader. But the extensive alterations of text, and rejection of passages as later insertions, assumed by some modern scholars, partly on the ground of imperfect agreement with the context, partly on account of the supposed exigencies of metre, appear to me to rest upon an insufficient basis. It seems to me far from clear that the Hebrew prophets, most of whom were also poets, and evidently men swayed often by emotion, are to be regarded as necessarily developing their thought with exact logical precision; so that,—to say nothing of the possibility that their discourses may have come down to us in a condensed form, with connecting links omitted,—imperfect agreement with the context appears to me, except in extreme cases, to be a questionable ground for suspecting the originality of a passage. And though the question of ancient Hebrew metre is an interesting one, and well worthy of the attention which has been recently paid to it, it surely deserves serious consideration whether a metrical system which, in order to be carried through, necessitates constant and often considerable changes in the text, can be reasonably regarded as the system actually followed by the Hebrew poets. Of course there can be no doubt that the prophets show a great tendency to throw their discourses into a rhythmical succession of parallel clauses, of approximately the same length, and often, in the same context, of approximately the same structure,—of three, four, or five accented syllables, for instance: the question is whether what seems to be the prevailing measure in a given context was adhered to with such rigidity that whatever does not conform to it in our present text must be altered or excised<sup>1</sup>.

The margins of the Revised Version are an integral and important part of the Revisers' work; and, except where they merely repeat the discarded renderings of the Authorized Version, nearly always contain renderings, or readings, superior to those adopted in the text. Hence they deserve careful attention on the part of any one using the version; for those which, in the estimation of the best scholars, are preferable to the renderings of the text, ought, as a matter of course, to be substituted for the latter, when the Revised Version is read, whether privately or in public. Many readers, however, are probably often at a loss to know whether the rendering of the text or of the margin deserves the preference. The following practical method is strongly recommended. Whatever book is being read, in every case in which an alternative rendering, or reading, is mentioned, ascertain from a good commentary which is to be preferred; and if the margin is to be preferred, draw a line against it for future use: when the passage is read or referred to again, the advantage of having thus noted beforehand the rendering to be preferred will soon be apparent. Naturally, a few difficult or ambiguous passages will remain in which a decision may be difficult or impossible. In the present volume I have been careful, as far as was possible, to indicate the renderings to be preferred. May I in conclusion invite the reader's attention to what I have said more fully on the importance of the margins of the Revised Version in the Introduction to my recently published Book of Job in the Revised Version with Introductions and brief Annotations (Oxford, 1906), pp. xxiv-xxxiii?

INTRODUCTION

§ 1. THE PERSON OF NAHUM.

RESPECTING the person of Nahum nothing is known beyond the statement in the title (i. 1) that he was an Elkoshite, i. e. an inhabitant of a place Elkosh. A village bearing the name of Alkush, containing a tomb which is shown as that of Nahum, exists at the present day about twenty-four miles north of Kouyunjik (the ancient Nineveh)<sup>1</sup>; but the tradition connecting this locality with the prophet cannot be traced back beyond the sixteenth century; and in all probability it arose simply from the similarity of the name to that of the prophet's native place, coupled with the fact that he prophesied against Nineveh. Another and more ancient tradition places Elkosh in Galilee. Jerome, in the preface to his Commentary on Nahum, says that there was a small village in Galilee called Elkese showing hardly any traces of ancient buildings, but nevertheless known to the Jews, and pointed out to him by his guide ('et mihi quoque a circumducente monstratus'). But though it is of course possible for a prophet of Nahum's time to have lived in Galilee, it is not very probable. A third tradition makes Nahum a native of Judah. In a book On the Lives of the Prophets, attributed (doubtfully) to Epiphanius, a native of

<sup>1</sup> See Layard's Nineveh and its Remains, i. 233, and Map. The 'tomb' is a 'simple plaster box covered with green cloth, and standing at the upper end of a large chamber,' in a house of modern building. The place is 'held in great reverence by Mohammedans and Christians, but especially by Jews, who flock there in great numbers at certain seasons of the year.'

Besanduke, a village in the south-west of Judah, and subsequently (A.D. 367) bishop of Salamis in Cyprus, it is said of Nahum that he was 'from Elkosh, beyond Bêth-gabrê, of the tribe of Simeon<sup>1</sup>.' Bêth-gabrê is the place now called Beit-Jibrîn, the ancient Eleutheropolis, about twenty miles S.W. of Jerusalem; and 'beyond' means presumably S. or S.W. of Beit-Jibrîn. This tradition is decidedly more probable than either of the former ones: Nahum's interests are in Judah, and a prophet of Nahum's time is much more likely to have sprung from Judah than from Galilee: but no place, Elkosh, is at present known in the required direction. There is, however, a well called Bir el-Kaus about six miles E. of Beit-jibrîn; whether this be the place referred to must be left undetermined<sup>2</sup>.

§ 2. HISTORY OF NAHUM'S TIME.

The prophecy of Nahum is devoted to a single theme: it is a cry of exultation over the impending fall of Nineveh,—and with it, of course, of the Assyrian empire, of which Nineveh was the capital. A brief outline of the history of Assyria during the past century will explain why there should be this exultation at the prospect of her fall. In the days of Hezekiah, Judah had suffered much at the hands of the Assyrians. After years of tribute, Hezekiah had at length revolted; the sequel was the expedition of Sennacherib in 701 B.C., when the country was overrun by the Assyrian troops, forty-six of the cities of Judah captured by the enemy, and Jerusalem itself only rescued from destruction by a pestilence which so crippled the army of the Assyrian king as to oblige him to return home without delay. Sennacherib's death, by the hand of his sons, took place in 681. His successor, Esarhaddon (681-668), after various other successes, in 676 besieged and took the Phoenician city of Sidon, carrying off to Nineveh much treasure. Shortly afterwards, being about to build a new palace, he tells us how he summoned before him 'twenty-two kings of the land Hatti (the Hittite land, but used in Assyrian at this time in a wider sense, so as to include Phoenicia and Palestine), who dwelt by the sea and in the midst of the sea,' and commanded them to furnish him with materials for the purpose. The list of kings thus summoned by him is headed by Baal king of Tyre, and Manasseh king of Judah, and includes the kings of Edom, Moab, Gaza, Ashkelon, Ashdod, and Cyprus. Esarhaddon next, in 670, made a move to conquer Egypt, which was now under the rule of Tirhakah (Is. xxxvii. 9=2 K. xix. 9), the third king<sup>1</sup> of the twenty-fifth (Ethiopian) dynasty. He advanced as far as Memphis, which quickly fell into his hands: he then proceeded to organize the country into an Assyrian province, installing twenty-two native dependent rulers over the twenty-two 'nomes,' or administrative districts, into which it was already divided. After conducting expeditions into Media, Urartu (the 'Ararat' of the Bible), and elsewhere, he died in 668, while on his way to Egypt to quell a revolt which had broken out there.

Esarhaddon, before his death, had nominated Assurbanipal his successor on the throne of Assyria, but appointed another son, Shamash-shum-ukin, to be viceroy of Babylon under Assurbanipal. Assurbanipal's first step was to proceed with the expedition against Egypt, which Esarhaddon had begun. On his way he received the homage of twenty-two tributary kings,— mostly the same as those mentioned by Esarhaddon,—who also, he adds, accompanied him with forces and ships. Tirhakah advanced to meet him as far as Memphis, but retreated at his approach to No (Thebes), the capital of Upper Egypt: both cities were entered by Asshurbanipal, the governors appointed by Esarhaddon were reinstated, and the authority of Assyria was re-established throughout the country. After Asshurbanipal's return home, however, the revolt in Egypt broke out again, under Turdamani (Urd-amani), Tirhakah's step-son; and the Assyrian king had to hasten back in order to suppress it (663). Turdamani, being obliged to evacuate Memphis, retreated, like his father, to No, whither Asshurbanipal pursued him:—

He saw the approach of my mighty battle, abandoned No, and fled to Kipkip. This city (No) in its entire compass, in reliance upon Asshur and Ishtar, my hands conquered. Silver, gold, precious stones, the treasure of his palace, the whole that was there, richly-woven garments, fine horses, men and women, two lofty obelisks, 2,500 talents in weight, which stood before the gate of the temple, I removed from their place, and brought them to Assyria. Abundant spoil, beyond reckoning, I carried away out of No. Over Egypt and Cush (Ethiopia) I let my weapons gleam, and I established my might. With full hand I returned in safety to Nineveh, the city of my sovereignty.

This capture of the ancient and splendid capital of Upper Egypt by the Assyrians is alluded to by Nahum (iii. 8-10), in terms which show the profound impression that it left upon men's memories.

After his successes in Egypt, Asshurbanipal received the submission, accompanied by rich presents, of Baal, king of Tyre, and other princes of Syria and Asia Minor. Then, after a successful invasion of Man (the Minni of Jer. li. 27, near the modern Armenia), Asshurbanipal found himself obliged to send an expedition into Elam (Gen. x. 22), a country on the E. of the Tigris, inhabited by a powerful and well-organized people, where one Teumman had recently usurped the throne. In connexion with this expedition an interesting fact which throws light on Assyrian prophecy is related. On the eve of the campaign, Asshurbanipal prayed solemnly to the goddess Ishtar, who to encourage him appeared in a vision to a seer, and promised victory to the Assyrian arms. Confident of success, Asshurbanipal set out for Elam, and pressed on up to the walls of its capital, Susa. Here, on the banks of the Eulaeus (the Ulai of Dan. viii. 2), there was a decisive battle, in which the Elamites were utterly routed:—

The land of Elam through its extent I covered, as when a mighty storm approaches. I cut off the head of Teumman, their king, the rebel who had plotted evil. Beyond number I slew his warriors; alive in my hands I took his fighting men; with their corpses as with thorns and thistles I filled the vicinity of Susa; their blood I caused to flow in the Eulaeus; its waters I stained like wool<sup>1</sup>.

After this defeat, there was a temporary settlement in Elam: but before long disturbances broke out again, and another campaign was found necessary by Asshurbanipal. After capturing many cities, and ravaging the country on his march, Asshurbanipal at last besieged and took Susa. Then began 'a work of pillage which it would be difficult to parallel in all the earlier Assyrian records. From the treasuries were brought forth the gold and silver which the kings of Elam had plundered in raids into Babylonia and elsewhere. Precious stones and costly woollen stuffs, chariots and waggons, horses and animals of various kinds were sent away to Assyria;' Susa itself was razed to the ground; temples were broken into, sacred groves cut down, sepulchres violated; the whole country was left a waste; and the conqueror boasts that 'the voice of men, the tread of cattle and sheep, and the sound of happy music,' were no longer to be heard in it<sup>2</sup>.

The above is, of course, a very summary account of Asshurbanipal's principal military achievements<sup>1</sup>: but it will suffice, perhaps, to give the reader a general idea of their character and magnitude. The Assyrians were masters in the art of war; and we can judge from the descriptions of Asshurbanipal with what terrible effect they launched themselves against their weaker neighbours. Almost every year a campaign against some tribe or people was being organized; and, even allowing for some rhetorical embellishment in their reports, one and all were equally helpless before them (cf. the striking comparison in Is. x. 14), they trod down the nations like dust, spread ruin and carnage through their lands, plundered their treasures, treated prisoners with savagery, and the dead with ignominy. Asshurbanipal in particular was guilty of great barbarity towards the vanquished: captive prisoners were shut up in cages and exposed to the gaze of the populace, or compelled to carry in a procession the heads of such as had been executed, while others were flayed alive<sup>2</sup>. We see also with what an iron hand the Assyrians interposed in the political affairs of their neighbours, 'removing the bounds of the peoples' (Is. x. 13), setting up or deposing kings, appointing governors at their will, or exacting tribute. Such a cruel and tyrannical power could not but be viewed with the intensest hatred by every nation which knew of it; and though Judah, so far as appears, had suffered less from the Assyrians during Nahum's lifetime than many other nations, yet the Hebrew prophet would know of course by report how other countries had been treated by them; and, we may feel assured, he does nothing more than 'utter the undoubted feeling of the whole western world, when in speaking of the ruin of Assyria he says, "All that hear the bruit of thee clap the hands over thee; for upon whom hath not thy wickedness passed continually?"'<sup>1</sup>

After Asshurbanipal, in spite of the external brilliance of his reign, the power of Assyria rapidly declined. The Assyrians had no genius, such as the Romans possessed, of civilizing conquered provinces or of constituting them parts of an organized empire; no high moral ideal inspired and braced them; their authority was maintained purely by the sword, and as soon as there was no strong hand to wield the sword, they speedily fell a prey to jealous or ambitious neighbours, and their empire broke up. Asshurbanipal was succeeded by Asshur-etil-ilāni (626-c. 620), and Asshur-etil-ilāni by Sin-shar-ishkun, the Saracos of the Greeks (c. 620-607); but both these seem to have been feeble rulers, and only three or four very brief and meagre inscriptions from their reigns have come down to us. Babylon at this time was under the rule of Nabopolassar (625-605), a Chaldaean (see on Hab. i. 6), father of the better known Nebuchadnezzar. At first Nabopolassar seems to have been viceroy of Babylon under Asshurbanipal and Asshur-etil-ilāni; but an irruption of tribes from the S. having taken place, probably in 612 or 611, being ordered by his suzerain Sin-shar-ishkun to take the field against them, instead of obeying the summons, he joined forces with the rebels, and declared the independence of Babylon<sup>2</sup>. The precise course of events which terminated ultimately in the destruction of Nineveh is not perfectly clear; but for our present purpose the uncertainty is immaterial. According to Herodotus (i. 102-104), the Medes, whose home was in the mountains between Nineveh and the Caspian Sea, had made an irruption into Assyria (c. 635 B.C.), which proved fatal both to their king Phraortes and to the greater part of his army; and a second invasion followed under Cyaxares, the son and successor of Phraortes, who, Herodotus says, even began the siege of Nineveh (c. 624), but was compelled to raise it, owing to his own country being invaded from the N.W. by Scythians. After the retreat of the Scythians from Asia, some years afterwards, he renewed the attack, and then took Nineveh (Hdt. i. 106). Some further particulars of the final close of the Assyrian empire are given in an inscription of Nabuna'id (Nabonidus), the last native king of Babylon (B.C. 555-538), found in 1895 at Hillah (Babylon)<sup>1</sup>. It would seem from this inscription that about 609 the Assyrian king, Sin-shar-ishkua, invaded Babylonia for the purpose of recovering his supremacy over it, and that Nabopolassar called in to assist him the Umman-manda, or 'hordes' of northern peoples, who are mentioned several times in the inscriptions as invading Assyria, and who were always ready for an excuse for doing so again. In Nabuna'id's own words, Marduk (Merodach, the supreme god of Babylon) summoned to his aid 'the king of the Umman-manda<sup>2</sup>,' who thereupon 'above and below, right and left, overwhelmed the land like a deluge,' destroying all the temples, and laying waste the cities. Nineveh is not expressly mentioned, any more than any other city is, but it cannot be doubted that it is included. More specific particulars respecting its fate are wanting; but the fact remains that in or about the year 607 B. C.<sup>1</sup> Nineveh was destroyed; her imposing fortifications (cf. p. 32) were powerless to save her: the palaces and other buildings, constructed mostly, except on the outside, of unburnt bricks, when once rifts had been made in them, quickly dissolved in the rains, and became masses of soft clay, which gradually shaped themselves into huge grass-covered mounds; so that when two centuries afterwards (B.C. 401) Xenophon led home the remnant of the 10,000 Greeks, and passed by the spot, all that he knew was that a great and impregnable city had once stood there, but 'Zeus made its inhabitants senseless, and so it was taken.' It was reserved for the explorers of the last century, especially Botta, Layard, and Rassam<sup>2</sup>, to penetrate into those mounds, and to exhume from them the still vocal monuments of the art, and literature, and history, and civilization of an empire which for more than five centuries had dominated the fortunes of the greater part of Western Asia, and which also, beyond perhaps anything else, had given occasion to the prophets of Israel for some of their greatest utterances<sup>3</sup>.

§ 3. CONTENTS AND OCCASION OF NAHUM'S PROPHECY.

Chap. i. is introductory. It begins by declaring the character of Yahweh as 'a jealous and avenging God;' and then passes on to describe, in impressive imagery, <sup>1</sup> The date is fixed (within a year or two) by a passage in col. x of the Inscription, in which Nabuna'id says that the temple of Sin (the moon-god) in Harran (the Biblical Haran) was destroyed by the Umman-manda fifty-four years before he restored it, in his third year (KB. ii. 2, 99), i. e. in 552.

<sup>2</sup> Asshurbanipal was a patron of literature; and Rassam discovered in particular, in 1853, the library founded by him at Nineveh, which has furnished modern scholars with some of the most valuable monuments of Babylonian and Assyrian literature which they possess.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Wellhausen, Hist. of Isr., p. 472f.; and the fine and instructive chapter in G. A. Smith's The Twelve Prophets, i. 44 ff.

the effect upon the world of nature, when He appears for judgement (vv. 2-6): Yahweh is good indeed to those who trust in Him, but upon His enemies, the unrighteous oppressors of His people, Hē pours forth His wrath, and Assyria He will utterly destroy (vv. 7-15)<sup>1</sup>.

Chap. ii. A vivid imaginative description of the capture and sack of Nineveh. The prophet depicts in rapid succession the approach of the assailants, the preparations for the attack, the charging of the chariots, the opening of the gates, the flight of the population, the treasures plundered by the captors, the city which had hitherto been the home of fearless and ferocious warriors (the 'den of lions,' v. 11 f.), deserted and silent.

Chap. iii. Further development of the theme of chap. ii. The cruelty, the avarice, the unprincipled diplomacy of the Assyrians are the cause of Nineveh's fall: and again Nahum sees in imagination the chariots and horsemen of the victors forcing their way through the streets and spreading carnage as they go (vv. 1-4). For Yahweh is against Nineveh in the day of her calamity; there will be none to comfort her; as little will she be able to avert her doom as was Thebes, the great capital of Egypt, in spite of her strength, and the vast hosts of her defenders (vv. 7-11). Her fortresses will fall before the invader, as ripe figs fall into the mouth when the tree is shaken; the busy crowds now thronging her streets will vanish like locusts; and amid the rejoicings of all who have suffered at her hands, the proud empire of Nineveh will pass for ever away (vv. 12-19).

Nahum's poetry is fine. Of all the prophets he is the one who in dignity and force approaches most nearly to Isaiah. His descriptions are graphic and brilliant (e. g. ii. 3-5, 10, iii. 2-3); his imagery is effective and striking (e. g. ii. 11, 12, iii. 17, 18); the thought is always expressed compactly; the parallelism is regular; Nahum nowhere displays that prolixity of style characteristic, for example, of Jeremiah and Ezekiel. The direct teaching of the book is almost confined to chap. i, where the thought is developed that Yahweh is 'a jealous and avenging God,' who, though He suffer long, will assuredly in the end punish wrong-doing, but who is faithful and good to those who are His true servants. Indirectly, the whole book is a prophecy of judgement upon brutality and wrong. It is remarkable that, unlike most of the prophets (except in some measure Habakkuk), Nahum makes no allusion to the sins of his own people, and sounds no call to repentance. He is so absorbed with the thought of the iniquities and impending punishment of Assyria, that, though he is manifestly aglow with moral feeling, he does not in this connexion think of his own people. The violence, the oppressions, the inhumanities of the tyrant, which have afflicted not Judah only but the then known world, must have their end; and the prophet for the moment will know nothing about his God, save that He is a God of vengeance. It is outraged humanity at large which calls for vengeance from his lips (ii. 13, iii. 4-5, 19<sup>b</sup>). 'Assyria in his hands becomes an object-lesson to the empires of the modern world, teaching as an eternal principle of the divine government of the world, the absolute necessity, for a nation's continued vitality, of that righteousness, personal, civic, and national, which alone "exalteth a nation"' (A. R. S. Kennedy in DB. iii. 477).

For the date of Nahum's prophecy we have, as a terminus a quo, the capture of Thebes (alluded to in iii. 8-10) in 663, and as a terminus ad quem the destruction of Nineveh by the Umman-manda in 607<sup>1</sup>. These somewhat wide limits may, however, no doubt be reduced.

The Hebrew prophets usually had some historical occasion for their prophecies ; and that can hardly in the present case be anything but some great danger threatening Nineveh,—the ‘hammer,’ as Nahum says in ii. 1, has already ‘come up before’ her : we should think naturally either of the occasion when, if Herodotus is to be believed, Cyaxares first laid siege to Nineveh in 624, or of the final and successful attack made by the Umman-manda in 607. We know too little of the preliminary movements of the attacking forces, or of the form in which the news of their approach first reached Judah, on either of these occasions, to be able with confidence to fix the date more precisely. The decision must depend largely upon the view taken of i. 13, 15. On the one hand, if these verses (see p. 26 n.) are really Nahum’s, Kuenen’s argument<sup>1</sup> is forcible that, as Judah was probably throughout Assurbanipal’s reign tributary to Assyria (p. 3), the promises of freedom expressed in them suit the first of these occasions much better than the second (when the decline of the Assyrian power had more than begun, and Judah was probably no longer tributary to it) : on the other hand, chs. ii–iii seem certainly, in Prof. Kennedy’s words (DB. iii. 476), to ‘palpitate with the conviction that the “utter end” of the Assyrian is at hand,’ and hence those scholars (as Wellh., Nowack, Kennedy, Marti), who reject Nahum’s authorship of i. 13, 15 (see p. 26), have no hesitation in assigning those parts of the book which they attribute to Nahum to the period shortly before 607, when the enemy had already entered Assyria, but before they had actually invested the capital (see iii. 14 f.) : it is also possible, even if i. 13, 15 are from Nahum himself, to refer the prophecy to the same date, if we may suppose Nahum to speak (G. A. Smith, p. 87) not from the feelings of any single year, but with the impression upon him of the whole epoch of Assyrian servitude drawing to a close<sup>1</sup>. We may wish that we had fuller information of the times: but for the purpose of understanding and appreciating the prophecy of Nahum, it is happily immaterial to which of the two occasions in question it is referred.

The unity of the book was formerly (e.g. by Kuenen in 1891) unquestioned. A closer study of ch. i (see pp. 25 ff.) has, however, led most recent commentators and critics to believe that it is in reality composite, and that the genuine prophecy of Nahum is limited either to ii. 1, 3—iii. 19 (A. R. S. Kennedy, Marti—the latter, however, including i. 11, 14), or, as Nahum could hardly (Wellh.) have begun his prophecy with ii. 1, to i. 9–12, 14, ii. 1, 3—iii. 19 (Nowack), to which the rest of ch. i and ii. 2 were prefixed afterwards as an introduction—i. 2–10 (to take Marti's view) being part of an acrostic Psalm, describing God's vengeance on His foes, and so enunciating the broad principle which is afterwards exemplified in the particular case of Nineveh (ii. 1, 3, &c.), and i. 12<sup>2</sup>, 13, 15, ii. 2 proclaiming the other side of the judgement on the heathen, viz. the salvation of Zion, and written with direct reference to the following prophecy on Nineveh. Cf. p. 26 n.

<sup>2</sup> The first part of this verse is certainly more or less corrupt (see the note ad loc.); and Marti corrects it into, 'The days of my controversy (with Israel) are ended, they are gone (Ps. xc. 10) and passed away' (אם שלמים וכן רבים שלמו ימי ריבי גו וְעָבְרוּ) (וכן נגזו וְעָבְרוּ).

1. 1. Title.

1. The burden of Nineveh. Render, with marg., The oracle concerning Nineveh. Massā means properly a 'lifting up,' and is hence used in a concrete sense sometimes of a 'thing lifted up,' i. e. a 'burden' (e. g. Ex. xxiii. 5); sometimes of a 'lifting up' of the voice, or of a 'word or speech taken up' upon the lips', i. e. a 'solemn utterance' or 'oracle': so 2 K. ix. 25 (lif. 'lifted up this uplifting' = 'uttered this utterance'; cf. R<sup>V</sup>m.); Jer. xxiii. 33-40 (where there is a play on the double meaning of the word, 'oracle' and 'burden'); Prov. xxxi. 1; and often in the titles of prophecies, as Is. xiii. 1, xiv. 28, xv. 1, &c. (see R<sup>V</sup>m.).

the vision. The 'vision,' especially in the earlier history of prophecy, appears often as a form of prophetic intuition (cf. Hos. xii. 10), and the prophets are frequently spoken of as 'seeing' things in vision (e. g. Nu. xxiv. 4, 14; 1 K. xxii. 17, 19; Am. vii-ix; Is. vi; Jer. i. 11, 13): cf. the term 'seer,' 1 S. ix. 9, 11, 18, 19 [rā'eh]; 2 S. xxiv. 11; Am. vii. 12 [hōzeh]; and Is. xxx. 10 (where 'prophets' and 'prophecy' are lit. 'gazers' and 'gaze'); and so in course of time 'vision' became a general term for a 'prophecy,' whether actually 'seen' or not (e. g. Is. i. 1; Obad. 1): and to 'see' came to be applied inexactly to 'oracle' (Is. xiii. 1; Hab. i. 1); 'word' (Is. ii. 1; Mic. i. 1); or 'words' (Am. i. 1). There is no reason for supposing, either here or in any of the other last-cited passages, that the prophecy following was originally the subject of a vision.

Nahum the Elkoshite. See the Introduction, § 1. The name 'Nahum' would, by analogy, mean 'full of comfort' [i. e., probably, 'is Yah']: see DB. iii. 473 n.

2-15. Introduction. Yahweh is a God who hates oppression and is powerful in judgement (vv. 2-6), He will therefore assuredly <sup>1</sup> Cf. the cognate verb 'to lift' or 'take up' in Nu. xxiii. 7, 18; Jer. vii. 16, 29; Am. v. 1, &c.

- 2 [A] (N) The LORD is a jealous God and avengeth; the LORD avengeth and is full of wrath; [the LORD taketh vengeance on his adversaries, and he reserveth wrath for his 3 enemies. The LORD is slow to anger, and great in power, interpose to overthrow the tyrant, and effect the deliverance of His own people (vv. 7-15). Vv. 2-8 consist really of a series of couplets: and might have been suitably printed in lines exhibiting the parallelism. They also show traces of an acrostic (indicated in the text by the Hebrew letters). See pp. 24-26.

2-6. Yahweh is a jealous and avenging God, who, though He may be long-suffering, does not eventually leave guilt unpunished, but manifests Himself terribly in judgement.

2. More nearly in the order of the original, and also more forcibly —

*A jealous and avenging God is Yahweh, Yahweh is avenging, and full of wrath;
Yahweh is avenging towards his adversaries,
And he retaineth (wrath) against his enemies.*

jealous: so that He will not endure that the honour which is His own or His people's due should be permanently withheld with impunity, and especially that it should be rendered to a false god (Ex. xx. 5, xxxiv. 14; Dt. xxxii. 21). Here the implicit thought is that His jealousy is now about to be aroused by the long-continued wrongs inflicted upon His people by its foes (cf. Is. xlii. 13; Ez. xxxvi. 5, 6, xxxix. 25).

avenging: cf. Is. i. 24; Ez. xxv. 14, 17; Is. lix. 17, lxi. 2, lxiii. 4; &c. The thought of Yahweh's vengeance is one which is much more prominent in the later than in the earlier prophets: see, e. g., Is. xxxiv. 8, xxxv. 4 (exilic); Jer. xlvi. 10, l. 15, 28, li. 6, 11, 36.

retaineth (wrath): i. e. is with difficulty appeased. The same expression Lev. xix. 18 (EVV., idiomatically, 'bear any grudge'); Jer. iii. 5; Ps. ciii. 9.

What is here predicated of God is denied of Him in Jer. iii. 5, Ps. ciii. 9, and forbidden to man in Lev. xix. 18 ('Thou shalt not avenge, or retain (anger) towards thy neighbour'): the difference, in each case, of circumstance and situation must be noted.

3<sup>a</sup>. slow to anger: as first in Ex. xxxiv. 6 (JE), and repeated thence frequently. Lit. 'long of anger' (μακρόθυμος): cf. the opposite, 'short (i. e. quick) of anger,' Prov. xiv. 17.

and will by no means clear the guilty:] the LORD (2) hath his way in the whirlwind and in the storm, and the clouds are the dust of his feet. (1) He rebuketh the sea, and maketh 4 it dry, and drieth up all the rivers: Bashan languisheth, (Job ix. 4), but of power to control the feelings (Job vi. 11 f.), and grant pardon to those who have given offence; cf. Nu. xiv. 17 f. (JE), of which indeed the present passage is apparently a reminiscence, 'Let the power of Yahweh be great (viz. to pardon, v. 19), according as thou hast spoken, saying, Yahweh is slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy . . . but will by no means clear (the guilty),' &c.

but will by no means clear the guilty. The reverse side of the Divine nature: Yahweh is indeed not readily moved to anger, and is ready to pardon, but He will not in the end leave the impenitent unpunished. The first and third clauses of this verse are taken directly from the great declaration of Yahweh's character contained in Ex. xxxiv. 6 f., and repeated Nu. xiv. 18 (and in part elsewhere, as Joel ii. 13; Ps. lxxxvi. 15, ciii. 8).

clear: more exactly, 'treat as innocent,' or (as in the Decalogue) 'hold guiltless,' i.e. 'leave unpunished,'—an idea which is certainly included: cf. (in the passive) Jer. xxv. 29 'and should ye be unpunished?'

3<sup>b</sup>. To the Hebrews Yahweh seemed to manifest Himself particularly in storm and earthquake, and other great movements of nature; and so there follows a description of His power, as seen in operation in a series of such phenomena:—

*Yahweh, his way is in the whirlwind and in the storm,
And the clouds are the dust of his feet.*

For the first line cf. especially Ps. xviii. 9–14, xxix. 3–9 (which show how the Hebrews pictured Yahweh as borne along in the thunder-cloud), and see also Is. xxix. 6, and on Hab. iii. 3, 4; the second line suggests a sublime picture of His greatness and majesty.

4. He rebuketh the sea, &c. Viz. by driving it back by His wind, with allusion to the drying up of the Red Sea at the Exodus (cf. Ps. cvi. 9), though (as the participle in the Hebrew shows) the expression is here generalized, and intended to refer to all similar phenomena of nature (cf. Is. xlv. 27, l. 2).

and drieth up all the streams. As the Jordan (Jos. iv. 23; Ps. lxxiv. 15); but also (notice 'all') streams in general, when the heat of summer or a protracted drought (1 K. xvii. 7; Joel i. 20) empties the wādys.

Bashan languisheth, &c. Bashan, Carmel, and Lebanon are and Carmel, and the flower of Lebanon languisheth.

 5 (7) The mountains quake at him, and the hills melt; (1) and the earth is upheaved at his presence, yea, the world, 6 and all that dwell therein. Who can stand before (1) his indignation? and who can abide in the fierceness of his anger? (7) his fury is poured out like fire, and the rocks 7 are broken asunder by him. (5) The LORD is good, a mentioned as the most luxuriantly wooded parts of Palestine (cf. Is. ii. 13, xxxiii. 9, xxxv. 2 [read majesty for excellency]); but even they must droop and wither, when the hot sirocco (see on Hag. ii. 17), blowing up fiercely from the desert (Jer. iv. 11), strikes upon them (cf. Hos. xiii. 15; Is. xl. 7). The work and power of God are, indeed, manifest as truly and effectually in the tranquil and normal operations of nature as in those which are violent and extraordinary: but they do not impress the beholder as visibly; and thus the latter are more naturally taken to typify, or illustrate, His revelation in judgement.

flower: better, bud, i. e. not only the bud of flowers (Is. xviii. 5), but also budding shoots and foliage (cf. the verb, Pr. xi. 28).

languisheth. Or, droopeth: cf. Joel i. 12.

5. The prophet returns here to the thought of v. 3<sup>b</sup>, the description of the theophany in the storm. As the thunder rolls along, the mountains seem to quake (cf. Ps. xxix. 6, 8; Hab. iii. 6), torrents of water pour down the gullies (Judges v. 5; Mic. i. 4), and the earth, shaken by the thunder (Ps. xviii. 7), seems to rise up out of its place. A thunder-storm in a mountainous region is evidently to be thought of; but the terms of the description are plainly hyperbolic.

is upheaved. The rendering is doubtful. Perhaps, changing only the vowel-points, we should read is wasted (Is. vi. 11).

6. The application. Who can stand before such a God, a God at whose presence even the rocks are torn in pieces?

like fire. It is as vehement and destructive as a stream of fire.

and the rocks are torn down before him (lit. 'from him'). The allusion is to masses of rock loosened in a thunder-storm. 'Torn down': the word is used of pulling or tearing down an altar (Jud. vi. 30) a tower (viii. 17), a city-wall (2 K. xxv. 10), &c.

7-13. Yahweh's wrath alights, however, not upon those who strong hold in the day of trouble; and (v) he knoweth them that put their trust in him. But with an overrunning flood (5) he will make a full end of the place thereof, and will pursue his enemies into darkness. [N] What do ye 9 trust in Him, but only upon His foes; and His people's oppressors He will utterly destroy.

7. Yahweh is good, as a strong hold, &c. Cf. Ps. xxxvii. 39; and especially Jer. xvi. 19. But LXX have 'to them that wait for him' (Ps. xxv. 3, &c.; and especially Lam. iii. 25) for 'as a strong hold': this yields a better sense and also forms a better parallel to the next clause, whether we substitute it for 'as a strong hold' (We. formerly, Dav., Smith), or suppose it to have fallen out accidentally before it (Gunkel, Nowack, We. now, Marti), omitting in the latter case the 'as.'

knoweth: i. e. taketh knowledge of, regardeth, as Ps. i. 6, xxxvii. 18; Gen. xviii. 19 (RV.); Am. iii. 2 ('You only have I known of all the families of the earth').

that take refuge in him. RV. 'put their trust in him' is a correct paraphrase, but one that entirely obliterates the expressive figure of the original. The verb is cognate with the substantive rendered refuge in Is. iv. 6, xxv. 4, Ps. xlv. 1, lxi. 3, &c.: it is rendered take refuge in RV. of Ruth ii. 12, Ps. xxxvi. 7, lvii. 1, lxi. 4, xci. 4, Is. xiv. 32; and the same rendering might well have been adopted elsewhere, as Jud. ix. 15; Is. xxx. 2, 3; Ps. ii. 12, vii. 1, xi. 1, &c., and here.

8. with an overflowing flood. Carrying all before it (Is. viii. 8, xxviii. 15).

a full end (Heb. kālāh). As Jer. iv. 27, v. 10, 18, xxx. 11 = xlv. 28. (In Is. x. 23, xxviii. 22 rendered 'a consumption.') the place thereof. Heb. her place, i.e. Nineveh's, the pronoun referring to a subject not yet expressed, but in the writer's mind (cf. 'them,' in Is. xiii. 2, 'their' in Is. xxxiii. 2, which show that this use of the pronoun is defensible). LXX, however, have, with a very slight change in the Heb., them that rise up against him (Dt. xxxiii. 11 al.), which forms an exact parallel to 'his enemies' in clause b, and is probably the original reading. Render then, with present tenses (the thought of the verse being now quite general), maketh a full end of them that rise up against him, and pursueth his enemies into darkness.

pursueth into darkness. Cf. for the thought, Job xviii. 18.

9. What do ye imagine, &c. Cf. v. 11. It is folly to frame plans<sup>1</sup> (cf. Hos. vii. 15) against Yahweh, or seek to thwart His purpose; for a full end is he making (or, 'is he about to make'); that is His intention: He is already carrying it out, and it will not be frustrated.

trouble (v. 7) shall not rise up twice: i. e. (probably) the trouble which now threatens Nineveh will be once for all; it will not need to be repeated. Cf. 1 S. xxvi. 8 'Let me smite him with the spear to the earth once, and I will not repeat it to him' (similarly 2 S. xx. 10). 'He will not take vengeance of his adversaries twice' (Gunk., Bick., Now., Marti: suggested by the LXX) <sup>1</sup> suits, however, the context well, and may be the original reading (cf. p. 25).

10. The American Revisers (see their notes at the end of RV. of the OT.), more exactly, For entangled like thorns, and drunken as with their drink, they shall be, &c. The words are understood to mean that the Ninevites, though in consequence of their strong defences they are as difficult to approach and deal with as a thorn-hedge (cf. 2 S. xxiii. 6 f.), and though—with sarcastic allusion to their supposed love of carousals—they are soaked through as with their wine, and consequently so wet that the flames, it might be thought, could not harm them, will nevertheless be consumed as quickly as dry stubble. But the sense thus obtained is very forced; and the words 'drunken as with their drink' come in strangely after the figure of the 'thorns,' besides being (in the Heb.) open to the suspicion of being a corrupt repetition of 'entangled'; so that it is impossible to believe that we have this part of the verse in its original form; the rendering 'like' for כִּי is also very questionable. Marti proposes, They are all of them as thorns cut off (Is. xxxiii. 12): this yields a good sense; but deviates considerably (except in 'thorns cut off') from the existing text.

11. Did not<sup>1</sup> one come forth out of thee, who imagined evil against Yahweh, who counselled villainy? The allusion is generally supposed to be to Sennacherib. The pronoun ('thee') is pointed as a feminine, implying that some country or city is addressed, which, in the present context, can be only Nineveh.

villainy. Lit. 'unprofitableness,' but in usage an opprobrious term for what is base (Dt. xv. 9 RV.; Ps. ci. 3 RV.), unprincipled, villainous. The marg. says, 'Heb. Belial'; but the word is not really a proper name, in spite of its use as such (in the form Beliar) in later times, as Jubilees i. 20, xv. 33, and in other writings of the same age<sup>2</sup>, and 2 Cor. vi. 15. 'Sons' (or 'men') 'of unprofit-ableness' (Jud. xix. 22, 1 S. xxv. 25 al.) means simply base
(Dt. xiii. 13 RV.) or unprincipled fellows.

12<sup>a</sup> (to pass away). The hosts of Nineveh, however complete and numerous, will nevertheless vanish and pass away. The Hebrew, however, in which this thought is expressed is very strange, and inspires as little confidence that it is correct as that of v. 10. We. suggests tentatively, Though the great waters
(fig. of the multitudes inhabiting Nineveh, cf. ii. 8) be never so full, they shall disappear and pass away: this would yield a good sense; but the word rendered 'never so full' (properly whole, complete) is not elsewhere used of waters.

12<sup>b</sup>. The text means: 'Though (lit. 'And') I have afflicted thee, (O Judah,) I will afflict thee no more' (so Keil, Marti<sup>3</sup>). The marg. is a threat to Assyria: 'And I will afflict thee, (O Assyria,) so that I afflict thee no more' (so Ew., Hi., We., Dav., Smith), i.e. the blow will be a final one. The latter is the better rendering of the Hebrew as it stands; but a very slight change (see note<sup>3</sup>) would

- 13 afflict thee no more. [A?] And now will I break his yoke from off thee, and will burst thy bonds in sunder.
- 14 [N] And the LORD hath given commandment concerning thee, that no more of thy name be sown: out of the house of thy gods will I cut off the graven image and the molten image; I will make thy grave; for thou art express unexceptionably the sense of the former rendering; and in the uncertainty of the context it is difficult to say which was the sense originally intended.

13. Judah is addressed: she will now, it is promised, be freed from the yoke of Assyria. Judah was probably tributary to Assyria through much, if not the whole, of Assurbanipal's reign (cf. pp. 3 f., 12). Cf. the same promise as made by Isaiah (Is. x. 27, xiv. 25).

his yoke. Properly, 'his bar,' i. e. (here) the horizontal pole of the yoke, to which two other perpendicular 'bars' were attached, enclosing the neck of the animal: cf. the 'bars of the yoke,' Lev. xxvi. 13; Ez. xxxiv. 27; Jer. xxvii. 2; Is. lviii. 6 (twice), 9 (where 'yoke' is properly 'bar,' as here).

and will burst (or, better, snap, Is. v. 27) thy thongs asunder. The thongs fastening the yoke to the animal's neck. The same two words are regularly used in the same connexion: cf. Ps. ii. 3, and especially Jer. xxx. 8.

14. Here the personified Assyrian people is addressed (the pronouns in this verse are pointed as masculines). As Wellh. has remarked, the verse would be much more forcible if the opening 'And' (י) were omitted: Yahweh hath given commandment, &c.

no more of thy name be sown. More exactly, it shall not be sown from thy name any more, i. e. thou shalt be annihilated, there will be none to perpetuate thy name: cf. Is. xiv. 20<sup>b</sup>, and such expressions as destroy or blot out the name, Dt. vii. 24, xxix. 20; 1 S. xxiv. 21.

out of the house (i. e. temple) of thy gods, &c. The Inscriptions have disclosed to us how many gods the Assyrians worshipped, Asshur, Ishtar, Anu, Shamash, Ninib, &c., and what honours they paid them<sup>1</sup>; but now, the prophet declares, they will all be powerless to save their country; their temples will be sacked, and their images destroyed.

vile in RV. is retained here from AV.; and, as Kimchi's note on the passage shows<sup>1</sup>, vile in AV. has here its now obsolete sense (derived directly from the Lat. vilis, 'cheap'), of common or of small account. The Heb. word kālal does not mean 'vile' in its modern sense of 'morally detestable'<sup>2</sup>. But the verse ends weakly; and perhaps, with a slight change, we should read (We., Marti), I will make thy grave a shame (iii. 5).

15. Assyria is no more; and the prophet sees in imagination upon the mountains the messengers hastening to announce the glad tidings in Jerusalem. Judah is now free; and she may keep her feasts in gladness, and offer thanks for her deliverance in fearlessness and security. The greater part of clause a is repeated by the author of Is. xl-lxvi in Is. lii. 7, when announcing to his people the approaching fall of Babylon, and the restoration of the exiles ('How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet,' &c.).

perform thy vows. The vows made in the days of her adversity (Ps. lxvi. 13-14). The command to perform, or pay, them implies indirectly that the prayer for deliverance has been granted, and that the danger is now past: cf. Ps. xxii. 25, lxi. 8, lxvi. 13.

the villainous one. A term of reproach for the hateful Assyrian, whose officers appointed to collect the tribute (cf. pp. 3 f., and Is. xxxiii. 18) will no more pass through Jerusalem. On the Heb. word used, see on v. 11; and for 'worthlessness,' as equivalent to 'worthless man (or men),' cf. 2 S. xxiii. 6 (see RVm.), Job xxxiv. 18<sup>a</sup> (RV. 'vile,' in the modern sense of the word). With the promise in general, cf. Is. lii. 1: also Joel iii. 17<sup>b</sup>; Zech. ix. 8.

In parts of Nah. i there are traces of an alphabetic arrangement in the successive half-verses, similar to what we find in Pss. ix-x

<sup>2</sup> The reader should remember that there are several passages in AV., and even in RV., in which 'vile' is used in this old sense, as Job xl. 4 AV., Jer. xv. 19 AV. RV.; Lam. i. 11 AV. RV.; Phil. iii. 21 AV. (= ταπεινώσεις).

(imperfect), xxv, xxxiv, xxxvii, cxi, cxii, cxix, cxlv, Lam. i-iv, Prov. xxxi. 10-31: it has accordingly been supposed that originally there was here a complete acrostic poem, and various attempts have been made to restore it completely. The alphabetical order is found actually in vv. 2<sup>a</sup> (א), 4<sup>a</sup> (ד), 5<sup>a</sup> (ה), 5<sup>b</sup> (ו), 6<sup>b</sup> (ז), 7<sup>a</sup> (ח), 9<sup>a</sup> (ט), and it can be restored by insignificant omissions in vv. 2<sup>b</sup> (ב), 7<sup>b</sup> (ז), 12<sup>b</sup> (י), and 14<sup>a</sup> (כ), and by a transposition and the addition of a letter in v. 6<sup>a</sup> (ו): the remaining verses can be adjusted to it only by the assumption that more extensive alterations and transpositions have taken place in the text than are probable (see, for instance, the restoration in Nowack's Commentary<sup>1</sup>). The best study on the subject is that of G. B. Gray in the Expositor, Sept. 1898, p. 207 ff., who, working upon the results obtained by his predecessors<sup>2</sup>, restores the first 12½ couplets of the acrostic as follows<sup>3</sup>:—

- 2<sup>a</sup> (א) A God jealous and avenging is Yahweh; Yahweh is avenging and full of wrath<sup>4</sup>.
3<sup>b</sup> (ב) In whirlwind and storm is his way, and clouds are the dust of his feet.
4<sup>a</sup> (ג) He rebuketh the sea and drieth it up, and parcheth all the rivers.
and the bud of Lebanon languisheth.
5<sup>a</sup> (ה) Mountains quake because of him, and [all] the hills melt.
5<sup>b</sup> (ו) And the earth becometh desolate<sup>6</sup> before him, the world and all that dwell therein.
and who can abide in the heat of his anger?

- 6<sup>b</sup> (π) His fury is poured out like fire, and the rocks are torn down<sup>1</sup> before him.
7<sup>a</sup> (Ϸ) Good is Yahweh to [them that wait for him]<sup>2</sup>, a stronghold in the day of trouble.
7<sup>b</sup> (י) He knoweth them that take refuge in him, and in the overflowing flood<sup>3</sup> [delivereth them].
8 (כ) An utter end he maketh of them that rise up against him, and he thrusteth<sup>4</sup> his enemies into darkness.
9<sup>c</sup> (ב) Not twice doth he take vengeance on his adversaries<sup>5</sup>, 9<sup>b</sup> an utter end he maketh.
9<sup>a</sup> (ח) What do ye devise against Yahweh?

As Dr. Gray points out, the successive Hebrew letters appear so often in the existing text at the constant interval of just two lines, that their occurrence can scarcely be accidental; and if this be granted, it is legitimate to endeavour to restore the acrostic. Dr. Gray's restoration of vv. 2-9 postulates no unreasonable textual alterations, and is certainly plausible. He makes no attempt to restore the rest of the acrostic, rightly feeling that the changes required would be so radical that there could be no confidence in their correctness<sup>6</sup>. We possess indeed no assurance that v. 10 ff. ever were part of the acrostic: the traces of the alphabetic order are here much slighter than in vv. 2-9, and the character of the verses differs; in vv. 2-9 the description of judgement is quite general, whereas in v. 10 ff. there seem to be definite references to a particular foe, whose yoke has rested upon Judah, but whose destruction is now promised, and the way is thus prepared for chap. ii. A formal acrostic poem is not very likely to have been adopted by Nahum himself as an introduction to this prophecy: assuming its existence (as far as v. 9) to be established, the most probable view is that a later editor found the poem among the materials before him, and the beginning of Nahum's genuine prophecy being mutilated, he adapted it as a suitable introduction to a prophecy of judgement, attaching himself no importance to its alphabetical form as such, and so

<sup>6</sup> Wellh., in the third edition of his Kleine Propheten (1898), p. 159, rejects altogether the attempts made by Gunkel and Bickell to restore vv. 10 ff.: he accepts, however, the acrostic for vv. 2-8 substantially as given above.

- 2 [N] He that dasheth in pieces is come up before thy face : keep the munition, watch the way, make thy loins strong, fortify thy power mightily. [A] For the LORD combining it in its latter part with what was preserved of Nahum himself (cf. Budde, EB. iii. 3261)<sup>1</sup>.

ii. 1-10. A powerful and graphic imaginative description of the capture and sack of Nineveh.

1. The approach of the attacking army. Nineveh is addressed, Nahum ironically bidding her prepare to resist the assailant.

He that dasheth in pieces: i.e. the destroying foe. As pointed, however, the Hebrew could only mean The scatterer; but probably the punctuation should be altered so as to express the sense of The Hammer or War-club (lit. The shatterer : Pr. xxv. 18 'maul'), the same word which in Jer. li. 20<sup>a</sup> (AV. and RV. 'battle-axe') is applied to a formidable crushing power (cf. the cognate verb, vv. 20<sup>b</sup>-23).

make strong (or firm) the loins: i.e. be courageous, the loins being the seat of strength. Contrast v. 10 'there is trembling in all loins,' and 'make the loins to totter,' in Ps. lxxix. 23.

fortify thy power mightily: better, 'strengthen (thy) might exceedingly,' i.e. collect thy powers, show both bodily prowess and mental intrepidity. Cf. the same expression, used similarly of a warrior, in Am. ii. 14.

2. The reason: Yahweh's purpose to restore the ancient glory and splendour of Jacob (cf. Is. xiv. 1). The verse seems, however, to be misplaced: it interrupts the description of the advance of the foe (vv. 1, 3), and would more naturally follow i. 15, even if (note <sup>1</sup> below; p. 13) it is not a later addition to the text of Nahum.

<sup>1</sup> In i. 12—ii. 2 it has been noticed that Assyria and Judah are addressed alternately in alternate verses: and it has consequently been supposed that the verses relating to Judah (i. 13, 15, ii. 2) do not belong to the original context of Nahum (We., Smith), but are a later addition intended to express the joyful consequences for Judah of the fall of its great foe (Now., Marti). Certainly ii. 2 cannot be in its right place, and the terms in which it is expressed might even suggest that Judah had been 'emptied' as it was in the Babylonian captivity; but the terms of i. 13, 15 leave no doubt as to who is addressed; and there seems to be no reason why Nahum himself should not have turned aside from his main theme in order to congratulate his country on its coming deliverance.

bringeth again the excellency of Jacob, as the excellency of Israel: for the emptiers have emptied them out, and marred their vine branches. [N] The shield of his mighty 3

bringeth again. Rather, is bringing back. Again was used in Old English where we should say back; and is so found in EVV. in passages where back would be much clearer: cf. Gen. xiv. 16, xxiv. 5, 6, 8, xlviii. 21. The participle, is bringing back (i. e. is on the way to bring back), as often in the prophets, of the imminent future (or of the future, conceived and pictured as imminent).

excellency (twice). Render majesty, or pride (in a good sense): cf. Hos. v. 5 and vii. 10 ('the pride of Israel'—referred here by some to Yahweh), Am. vi. 8, viii. 7, Jer. xiii. 9 (in a bad sense), Ps. xlvii. 4 (in a good sense), where a corresponding change should be made in EVV. Excellency (like excellent) retained in Old English its etymological sense, which it has now lost, of surpassingness, pre-eminence (from ex-cello, to rise up out of); and both words wherever they occur in AV. or RV. must be understood in this sense<sup>1</sup>. Here, however, the Heb. word (gā'ōn) does not mean even pre-eminence, but majesty or pride (by both of which words it is in fact often rendered: Is. ii. 10, 19, 21; Mic. v. 4 al.). The retention of excellency and excellent in the RV. for words expressive of pre-eminence, superiority, or majesty, is much to be deplored<sup>2</sup>.

Jacob,—in poetry (e. g. Gen. xlix.) and the higher prose style, a synonym of Israel,—must here (from the context) denote Judah (as Is. xliii. 1, xlv. 1 al.).

as the majesty of Israel: i. e. if the text be sound, as He has promised (e. g. in Hos. xiv) to restore the glory of the Northern Kingdom. But if a comparison between the two kingdoms had been intended, we should have expected it to be more clearly expressed by the use of 'Judah' for 'Jacob' in the preceding clause: perhaps therefore the present clause is a gloss, added originally upon the margin by a scribe.

and marred their vine branches. Judah is represented under the figure of a vine (Is. v. 1 ff.; Ps. lxxx. 8 ff.), which has been ravaged by rough assailants (cf. Jer. v. 10, xii. 10—in each case the word rendered destroyed being the same as that rendered marred here).

3-5. Continuation of v. 1 ; and description of the assault.

3. The equipment of the warriors.

mighty men : i. e. warriors : a common usage, as in David's 'mighty men,' 2 S. xxiii. 8, 1 K. i. 8, 10. The pronoun ('his') refers to the destroyer mentioned in v. 1.

made red : the allusion is uncertain. It is generally supposed to be to shields covered with bright copper, which in the sunlight would reflect a reddish tint (Jos. Ant. xiii. 12. 5 ; 1 Macc. vi. 39) ; but shields were also often covered with leather, which may have been dyed red. Whichever of these views is correct, the red colour is no doubt mentioned particularly as being suggestive of blood.

in scarlet. The army of the Persians, under the younger Cyrus (Xen. Cyrop. VI. iv. 1), 'flashed with bronze, and gleamed with crimson military cloaks (ἤνθει δὲ φοινικίσι)' ; the Spartan soldiers, also, wore cloaks of the same colour (Liddell and Scott, s. v. φοινικίς).

steel. The word occurs only here : and the meaning 'steel' was conjectured by Ges. from the sense of the corresponding word in Arabic. It is, however, a serious objection to this etymology, that the Arabic word for steel (shulādh) is borrowed from the Persian (pulādo) ; and a Persian word would hardly have found its way into Hebrew as early as in the time of Nahum. But whatever uncertainty may rest upon the meaning of this particular word, 'with fire' (see RVm.) makes it probable that the clause was meant to contain some reference to 'the burnished plates of metal with which the chariots were mounted or mailed, and the glittering weapons hung on them' (Dav.).

spears : lit. 'fir trees,' supposed here to be used for 'long lances.' But the expression is a strange one ; and LXX, Pesh. (reading 1 for 2) have 'horsemen,' or, as the same word might also be vocalized (Lex. p. 832<sup>n</sup>), chargers (Jer. xlvi. 4) : the clause will then describe the impetuous movements of the cavalry, as they rush into the fray (so We., Now., Marti, Halévy).

4. The charging of the chariots.

rage : lit. 'are mad.' Cf. Jer. xlvi. 9, also of chariots.

the streets . . . the broad places. As the attacking forces do not make their assault upon the walls till v. 5 end, the prophet must here picture them as engaged in the 'streets' and 'broad places' of the suburbs, outside the fortified wall of the city, and according to Col. Billerbeck, in his elaborate study of the topography and fortifications of ancient Nineveh<sup>1</sup>, on its N. side. The 'broad place' was very much what we should call a square: cf. (in RV.) Is. xv. 3; 2 Ch. xxxii. 6; Neh. viii. 1, 3, 16. The word is often, even in RV., misrendered 'street'; cf. on Zech. viii. 4.

like torches, &c. 'The glitter of the mailed chariots and their furious racing is compared to torches and lightning' (Davidson).

run. More exactly, 'dart to and fro,' the form used being intensive. Halévy, changing a letter, would read flash.

5<sup>a, b</sup>. The hurried and impotent measures of defence taken by the inhabitants.

He remembereth his worthies. 'He' is the Assyrian king, who, as he sees the enemy's chariots approaching the walls, bethinks himself of his worthies, or nobles (Jud. v. 13),—i. e. of the commanders of his troops (cf. iii. 18), who may summon their men, and organize the defence of the city.

5<sup>c, d</sup>. The besiegers' assault upon the walls.

the mantelet: lit. 'the coverer.' The word occurs only here; but probably denotes the 'mantelet<sup>2</sup>,' or movable shelter, which enclosed and protected the men who worked the ram, or other battering implement, employed in ancient warfare for making a breach in a wall. See illustrations of such movable shelters, as used by the Assyrians themselves, in Rawlinson, Anc. Monarchies, i. 470, or EB. s. v. 'Siege.'

6. The entry into the city. (Cf. the plan, p. 16.)

The gates of the streams. Nineveh lay on the E. bank of the Tigris, about 25 miles above its confluence with the Upper Zab (which flows into it from the NE.); it was in shape an irregular parallelogram, its NW. wall being about a mile long, and its SW. wall about two and a half miles long. The Khusur, a perennial mountain-stream, ran through it from NE. to SW.; a little NW. of this there was also a canal, which left the Khusur higher up, and likewise flowed through the city till it entered the Tigris. The wall of the city was surrounded by a deep moat. E. of the city there was a strong semi-circular outwork; and outside this, two massive walls, each at least fifty feet high, and nearly three miles long, with a broad moat between them. These moats were filled with water from the Khusur and the canal; and remains of the large dams and sluices regulating the supply of water are still traceable in places. We cannot, however, be sure what exactly the 'gates of the streams' here mean. The sluices by which the moats were emptied have been suggested; but perhaps the most probable view on the whole is that the reference is to the gates at the points where the Khusur and the canal passed through the city walls (the vulnerable side of Nineveh was on the N.). It is scarcely to be supposed that Nahum had an accurate topographical knowledge of Nineveh; he knew, no doubt, generally that it was protected by strong walls and encircling moats: the details he would fill in with the help of his imagination. Whatever 'gates' he had in mind, the effect of their being opened, as the prophet pictured it, was that the city was at the mercy of the foe.

the palace is dissolved. More clearly (for 'dissolve' is not now used in its old fig. sense of relax, enfeeble, weaken), 'is melted away (in fear)'; the meaning being that its inmates are incapacitated and helpless through terror and despair. We might say now, is in dismay. Cf. Ex. xv. 15; Jos. ii. 9, 24; Is. xiv. 31.

7. The capture and exile of the queen.

Huzzab. The sequel shows (notice 'her handmaids') that this must either be itself the name of the queen, or be the corruption of some word which was the name of the queen. Nothing more is known of the person intended; nor has any light been thrown upon the word by Assyriology. The marg. it is decreed is doubtful philologically, and may be disregarded.

mourn. Moan (which is no doubt the sense intended by the Revisers in 'mourn' <sup>1</sup>). The verb means elsewhere in Heb. to lead (so AV. and RVm.); but 'lead' is here unsuited to the context, and 'moan' is supported by the use of the corresponding word in Syriac (see Ps. xxxviii. 8, in the Syriac Version).

as with the voice of doves. For the comparison of the moaning of mourners to the note of the dove, cf. Ez. vii. 16; also Is. xxxviii. 14, lix. 11 (in each case mourn being = 'moan').

tabering: i. e. drumming or beating <sup>2</sup>. To smite the breast was a gesture of grief or despair: Luke xviii. 13; cf. also κόπτομαι (Mt. xi. 17, &c.), τύπτομαι, and Aen. i. 481.

8. The vast population of Nineveh is compared to the water of a large tank, rapidly pouring away through opened sluices: the command to halt is unheeded; none pauses in his flight.

from the days that she hath been (RVm.): i. e. ever since the beginning of her history. RV. (= AV.) is a paraphrase <sup>3</sup>. But it is very possible that some letters (מים) have been repeated by error; and that we should read simply, But Nineveh is like a pool of waters fleeing away.

look not back. The marg. is unnecessary: see Jer. xlvi. 5.

9. The sack of the city. Nineveh being thus abandoned by its inhabitants, the prophet dramatically addresses the conquerors, and bids them plunder its treasures, which include every kind of valuable, and are endless.

<sup>3</sup> The Heb. is, however, very peculiar. The same sense would be obtained much more naturally by reading מִיָּמֶיךָ for מִיָּמֶי: see i K. i. 6; Job xxxviii. 12.

the glory (or as marg. : see Gen. xxxi. 1. RVm., and cf. Is. x. 3 end) of all precious articles (Hos. xiii. 15, where the Heb. is the same). The word rendered articles is a wide one, and may include both jewels, or ornaments (Ex. xi. 2), vessels (2 K. iv. 3), and household goods or furniture (Gen. xxxi. 37, xlv. 20, 'stuff'), as also weapons (1 S. xxi. 8), instruments (Am. vi. 5), &c. The valuables of all kinds to be found in a great city are what is denoted by the expression.

10. In a series of exclamations, the prophet depicts graphically the desolation of the city, and the helplessness and dismay of those still remaining in it: Empty, and blank, and bare ! and melting heart, and tottering of knees, and anguish in all loins ; and the faces of them all are waxed pale.

empty, &c. The first three words (būkāh ūmebūkāh ūmebullākāh, properly substantives) contain a paronomasia such as the Hebrew prophets love (cf. Is. xxii. 5, xxix. 2 ; Zeph. i. 15), but of a kind which cannot be reproduced in English. For the word rendered empty cf. the cognate verb, Jer. xix. 7, and of a land, as here, v. 2 above, Jer. li. 2, Is. xxiv. 1, 3 ; for that rendered bare, Is. xxiv. 1 (EVV. maketh . . waste : not elsewhere).

tottering of knees. Cf. the 'bowing knees' of Job iv. 4, Is. xxxv. 3. For tottering, see Jer. x. 4 ('move'), Is. xxviii. 7 ('stumble'). 'Smite together' is a paraphrase, due to the Targ. and Kimchi explaining here by the word used in Dan. v. 6.

anguish (properly 'twisting,' 'writhing') in all loins. Cf. Is. xxi. 3.

and the faces, &c. The same clause recurs in Joel ii. 6. The expression rendered 'are waxed pale' is a peculiar one, and its exact meaning is uncertain (modern scholars commonly render withdraw beauty) : but the paraphrase of RV. no doubt expresses fairly the general sense.

11-12. The prophet, seeing in imagination Nīneveh's place empty, inquires ironically what has become of it. He calls it a den of 'lions,' with allusion not only to the intrepidity of its warriors, but also to the cruelty, ferocity, and rapacity, with which, as their inscriptions abundantly testify, they treated conquered nations, dealing mercilessly with their captives, and, like lions carrying off and the feeding place of the young lions, where the lion<sup>a</sup> and the lioness walked, the lion's whelp, and none made them afraid? The lion did tear in pieces enough for his<sup>12</sup> whelps, and strangled for his lionesses, and filled his caves with prey, and his dens with ravin. Behold, I am against<sup>13</sup> thee, saith the LORD of hosts, and I will burn her chariots

the feeding place of the young lions. More exactly, and a pasture ground was it for the young lions. The rendering of RV. conceals a difficulty. The Heb. word used means a grazing- or pasture-ground (Ez. xxxiv. 4) for cattle, not a 'feeding-place' in which a carnivorous animal might find or devour its prey. By transposing two letters (We., Now., Marti), we obtain cave (not the word used in v. 12) for 'pasture-ground,' which forms a good parallel to 'den.'

and the lioness. The marg. may be disregarded. We., Now., Smith, Marti, however (following LXX, Pesh.), read, for 'where the lion (and) the lioness walked,' 'whither the lion retreated' (lit. 'went to enter in,' לָבִיא לָבִיא).

and none made them afraid. Finely suggestive of the security with which Nineveh exercised its supremacy over the nations.

caves. Better, for distinction, holes: 1 S. xiv. 11; Job xxx. 6 (RV.).

ravin. An archaism for plunder (Old-F. ravine; Lat. rapina, the word used here in the Vulgate). Elsewhere we have the verb to ravin, as Gen. xlix. 27; Mt. vii. 15: cf. Cymbeline, i. 6, 49. See Aldis Wright's Bible Word-book, s. v.

13. But now, ere long, all this will belong to the past; Yahweh has pronounced the word against Nineveh; and the voice of her emissaries, bearing unwelcome commands among the nations, will no more be heard.

I am against thee. So iii. 5; and often in Jer. (as xxi. 13, xxiii. 30, 31, 32) and Ezek. (as v. 8, xiii. 8, 20, xxi. 8). Not elsewhere: cf. the writer's Introduction to the Literature of the OT. p. 279 (ed. 6 or 7, p. 297).

her chariots. Abrupt changes of person certainly occur in in the smoke, and the sword shall devour thy young lions: and I will cut off thy prey from the earth, and the voice of thy messengers shall no more be heard.

3 Woe to the bloody city! it is all full of lies and rapine;
2 the prey departeth not. The noise of the whip, and the Heb. poetry (e. g. Is. xlii. 20): but the change from the second person to the third is here very weak, and the second person reappears directly afterwards: so that no doubt thy should be read for her. The war-chariots of the Assyrians were famous (cf. Is. xxxvii. 24). At the same time, as the figure of the lions is kept up in the sequel, we should rather expect some kindred expression here: Davidson suggests thy lair (so Halévy), Smend thy thicket (Jer. iv. 7).

thy messengers. Hateful officials like the Rabshakeh, Is. xxxvi. 4 ff., or the 'messengers' mentioned in Is. xxxvii. 9 ff., exacting tribute (cf. p. 12) or demanding submission: see also Is. xxxiii. 18.

iii. In this chapter the theme of ch. ii is further developed and confirmed. The approaching downfall of Nineveh (which is again vividly portrayed, vv. 2, 3) is a natural consequence of her cruel and treacherous treatment of other nations, vv. 1-7; the fate of Thebes, in Egypt, will also be hers; her defences, one after another, will yield to the invader; and, amid the rejoicings of all who have suffered at her hands, her power, invincible as it seemed, will pass for ever away, vv. 8-19.

1. Ah! the bloody city, &c. Alluding to the sanguinary military expeditions in which the Assyrians were nearly always engaged.

Ah! not 'Woe' (see Jer. xxii. 18, xxxiv. 5): the interj. hōy is not denunciatory, but expresses dissatisfaction and pain: cf. Hab. ii. 6, 9, 12, &c.

lies. Alluding probably to the delusive promises of help or protection by which the Assyrians would take advantage of the weaker nations, and get them into their power.

rapine. Properly 'what is rent.' The cognate verb occurs in Ps. vii. 2, where it is used of a lion, and rendered in EVV. 'rending in pieces.'

the prey. Properly, 'what is torn,' as ii. 13 and frequently (cf. the cognate verb 'tear' in Ps. vii. 2). This word and 'rapine' show that the figure of ii. 11 f. is still in the prophet's mind: Nineveh is like a lions' den full of torn prey. The inscriptions of the Assyrian kings abound with descriptions of the noise of the rattling of wheels ; and pransing horses, and jumping chariots ; the horseman <sup>a</sup>mounting, and the <sup>3</sup> flashing sword, and the glittering spear ; and a multitude of slain, and a great heap of carcases : and there is none end of the corpses ; they stumble upon their corpses : because of the multitude of the whoredoms of the well <sup>4</sup> favoured harlot, the mistress of witchcrafts, that selleth endless booty which they took year after year from conquered nations.

2-3. A graphic description of the chariots and horsemen of the foe, forcing their way through the streets, and spreading carnage as they go. The series of exclamations, as ii. 10.

2. pransing. Cf. Jud. v. 22.

jumping. So rapidly, viz., do they advance over the uneven ground. Cf. Joel ii. 5, where the same word is rendered 'leap.'

3. mounting. The marg. charging is much preferable, the verb being causative (lit. 'bringing up,' viz. the horse) : so Jer. li. 27 (RV. 'cause the horses to come up'). The sword and spear which follow are those of the foot-soldiers.

4. The reason why this doom falls upon Nineveh. Whoredom is here used figuratively of the deceptive friendship and specious promises by which the Assyrians beguiled the smaller states, so as to get them into their power. Nineveh is called by the opprobrious term harlot, because, being externally attractive ('well-favoured') and plausible, she by these methods lured the nations to their ruin, merely in order to benefit and aggrandize herself<sup>1</sup>.

well favoured : i. e. 'beautiful,' — 'favour' in Old English having the meaning of appearance, aspect, countenance (as in Shakespeare, Cymb. v. 5. 93 'His favour is familiar to me')<sup>2</sup>. So Gen. xxix. 17, xxxix. 6, xli. 2, and elsewhere, in both AV. and RV. The allusion will be to the beauty and magnificence of the city, which dazzled and fascinated beholders.

<sup>1</sup> The terms 'whoredom,' 'harlot,' 'go a-whoring,' are commonly used in a figurative sense of infidelity to Yahweh, and especially of the desertion of Him for other gods (as Ex. xxxiv. 15, 16) ; but this will not be the meaning here, where the reference is to a heathen state.

nations through her whoredoms, and families through her

9; and 'sorcerers' in Mal. iii. 5). The reference is to 'the arts of statecraft, the influences used upon the nations, which acted on them like the charms and incantations and drugs of the sorceress' (Davidson).

families. In a wide sense = nations, as Gen. xii. 3; Am. iii. 1, 2; Jer. i. 15, al.

5. Behold, I am against thee. As ii. 14.

and I will uncover thy skirts (or train) before thy face. Cf. the very similar expressions in Jer. xiii. 22 (read 'uncovered'), 26 (read 'strip off . . . before'). The allusion is probably to the practice of exposing a woman convicted of unchastity (cf. Ez. xvi. 37; Hos. ii. 3): Nineveh has acted as a harlot, and must receive the punishment of a harlot. 'Before thy face' means, as a disgrace which thou must witness thyself. 'Discover' here in AV., RV. is an archaism, meaning to 'remove what served as a covering,' which occurs also in AV. of Jer. xiii. 22, 26 (where it is retained in RV. as here), Job xli. 13 (RV. 'strippeth off'), Ps. xxix. 9 (RV. 'strippeth bare'), Is. xxii. 8 (RV. 'took away').

abominable filth. The rendering is unnecessarily strong. The Heb. is detestable things, which commonly means idols or things connected with idolatry (cf. on Zech. ix. 7): here the meaning is more general, loathsome things.

make thee vile. Rather, 'treat thee with contumely' or 'disgrace thee': cf. Dt. xxxii. 15 (RV. 'lightly esteemed'), Jer. xiv. 21 ('disgrace'), Mic. vii. 6 ('dishonoureth').

set thee as a gazingstock: to be looked at with derision. Cf. Ez. xxviii. 17 end; and the inscription of Mesha, l. 12 (see DB. iii. 407<sup>a</sup>; EB. iii. 3045 f.): 'And I slew all the people from the city (Ataroth), a gazingstock unto Chemosh and unto Moab.'

bemoan (better, commiserate,—nûd does not imply the idea of 'moaning') . . . comforters. Cf. Is. li. 19; Job ii. 11.

8-10. Has Nineveh any reason to expect a better fate than No (Thebes) in Egypt, which, in spite of the god who was its protector, and its strong material defences, had been taken by Assurbanipal some fifty years before (B. C. 663)<sup>1</sup>?

8. Art thou better? i. e. better placed and protected.

No-amon. Rather, No of Amon, or Amon's No. Amon (or Ammon) was the name of the tutelary god of No, in whose honour had been built the immense temple, with its façades, columns, and huge hypostyle hall covering more than an acre of ground, which is still the wonder of Karnak. The expression thus suggests that No was specially under Amon's protection<sup>2</sup>. 'No' is the Egyptian Net, 'city'; and the city here referred to was called by the Egyptians (see DB. s.v.) sometimes N.t rs.t, 'southern city,' sometimes N.t Ymn, 'city of Amon,' as here, sometimes simply N.t, the 'city' par excellence (so Jer. xlv. 25; Ez. xxx. 14<sup>3</sup>, 15<sup>3</sup>, 16). By the Greeks it was called Thebes: it was the great and celebrated capital of Upper Egypt, situated far up the Nile (some 400 miles above Cairo), in the centre of a broad green plain, into which the Nile-valley here expands, the capital of the brilliant rulers of the 18th, 19th, and 20th dynasties, who constructed there the great temples, with their halls, colonnades, colossal statues, obelisks, and sculptures, on a scale of imposing magnificence, to which there is probably no parallel in the world. The city proper lay on the E. bank of the Nile—here a stream nearly half a mile broad, which, just at Thebes, broadens out so as to enclose three islands—the extensive ruins of Luxor and Karnak (one and a half miles N. E. of Luxor) marking its site; there was a suburb (now Kurnah) on the opposite side of the river, but this consisted chiefly of an immense necropolis, there being in front a long row of temples devoted to the worship of former kings, and behind them thousands of tombs (many of which have recently been excavated), hewn out in the gorges and rocky sides of the

Libyan hills<sup>1</sup>. The comparison is the more apposite, as Thebes had been the capital of great conquering dynasties, who had beautified it from the wealth gained in their wars, and erected in it the magniloquent records of their successes, just as the Assyrian kings had done in Nineveh.

that was situate. Lit. 'that sat' or 'dwelt,' viz. proudly and securely. The city is almost personified: cf. Is. xlviii. 8 RVm.

upon the rivers. Render, upon the Nile-streams (plur. of ye'ôr, the regular Hebrew word for the Nile, and usually denoting arms, or canals running into it, as Ex. vii. 19). The Nile, as remarked above, does divide into two or three streams at Thebes, but it may be doubted whether Nahum was aware of this fact. Rather, he knew that Thebes was on the Nile, and he uses the plural to amplify the picture.

the sea: i. e. the Nile, as Is. xviii. 2, xix. 5; Job xli. 31.

and her wall was from the sea: i. e. consisted of the sea (the Nile). But a simple change of vocalization, and her wall was the waters, greatly improves the clause, and avoids the repetition of the same word 'sea.' The position of the city is idealized: for the greater part of its circumference Thebes was not bounded by the Nile at all; and, according to recent authorities, was not protected by walls of any kind<sup>2</sup>.

9. No was defended, further, by the number of gallant soldiers who served in her hosts.

Ethiopia. Heb. 'Kush,' as always (e. g. Is. xviii. 1; cf. Gen. x. 6). Kush (Egypt, Kash, Kesh) was the name of a people, whose home was on the S. of Egypt proper (S. of the First Cataract, lat. 24° N.), and whom the Egyptian kings often boast of subduing; but at the time here referred to (663 B. C.), Kush and Egypt were virtually one, the kings of the twenty-fifth or Ethiopian dynasty having been on the throne of Egypt, with Thebes as their capital, since B. C. 715.

Egypt. The whole force of the world-renowned empire of Egypt was at her disposal, and could act as her defenders.

it was infinite. In the Heb. there was no end—the same phrase which occurs in ii. 9 (Heb. 10), iii. 3; also in Is. ii. 7 (twice).

Put and Lubim. Peoples of N. Africa, mentioned elsewhere also as contributing contingents to armies. Put is in Gen. x. 6 the third 'son' of Ham, next to Kush and Mizraim (Egypt); and the Lubim are very probably the same as the Lehabim of Gen. x. 13 (one of the tribes 'begotten' by Mizraim, i. e. a tribe contiguous to, or dependent on, Egypt). Put is named among the mercenaries of Tyre in Ez. xxvii. 10; as serving in the Egyptian army in Jer. xlvi. 9 'Cush and Put, that handle the shield' (cf. Ez. xxx. 5); and as forming part of the hosts of Gog in Ez. xxxviii. 5. The Lubim are mentioned otherwise only in very late writers (2 Ch. xii. 3, xvi. 8, Dan. xi. 43): they may well be the 'Libyans' of the classical authors.

thy helpers. Read, with LXX, 'her helpers.' No is spoken of, both before and afterwards, in the third person; the second person (vv. 8<sup>a</sup>, 11) denotes Nineveh.

10. Yet, notwithstanding her queenly position, and the hosts of her defenders, Thebes was taken by the enemy; and her people were ignominiously carried into exile. Assurbanipal (above, p. 6) speaks at length of the spoil which was carried off by him from Thebes; but it would hardly be inferred from the terms used by him that the population as a whole was taken into exile.

dashed in pieces. According to a barbarous usage of ancient warfare: cf. 2 K. viii. 12; Is. xiii. 16; Hos. xiii. 16.

and they cast lots, &c. Viz. for the nobles taken as captives: cf. Ob. 11; Joel iii. 3.

thou shalt be hid. Interpreted to mean ‘thou shalt disappear ;’ but the sense is a doubtful one, and the thought would come too early in the description (see the following clause). With the change of a letter, we could read ‘thou shalt faint’ or ‘swoon,’ prostrated by the disaster : cf. Is. li. 20 (where the context is similar).

thou also shalt seek (viz. in vain) a strong hold (or place of refuge<sup>1</sup> : cf. Is. xxx. 2<sup>b</sup> RVm.) from the enemy. Fleeing, viz., before him.

12. The fortresses of Nineveh—i. e. probably, the forts and watch-towers, which, as existing mounds seem to show, guarded the approach to the capital—are compared to fig-trees with early figs upon them, which, when the trees are shaken, fall into the mouth of the eater ; a figure of the ease with which they will be taken by the besiegers. For early, or first-ripe, figs, which were accounted a delicacy, cf. Is. xxviii. 4, Mic. vii. 1.

15-18. But her preparations will be in vain : the multitudes of in the dust.

15. There, within thy strong defences, will the fire devour the city, and the sword cut off her inhabitants.

it shall devour thee like the young locust. As easily and quickly as the young locust devours grass and herbage. But the clause is rather redundant, and (with the 'young locust' following, in a different connexion) weak ; and Wellh. may be right in regarding the two words of which (in the Hebrew) it consists as a gloss, suggested by the context, on 'devour' just before.

the young locust (Heb. yelek, properly, as it seems, the lapper) is very probably the locust in its second or pupa stage of growth : see on v. 16.

make thyself many as the young locust, &c. The two imperatives are meant ironically (cf. the imperatives in 1 K. ii. 22 ; Am. iv. 4) : 'though thou make thyself many as the young locust, &c., it will be of no avail : all will vanish away before the enemy.'
'Many' (twice) is lit. 'heavy,' i. e. a vast, compact mass<sup>1</sup>.

'Draw thee water for the siege, strengthen thy fortresses, Go into the clay, and tread the mortar, lay hold of the brick-

the stars of heaven. A figure of a countless multitude: Ex. xxxiii. 13; Dt. i. 10 al.

16<sup>b</sup>. The young locust strippeth itself<sup>1</sup>, and flieth away. The locust, when in its pupa stage, is able only to hop, its wings being enclosed in rough horny sheaths (cf. Jer. li. 27 'as the rough yelekē'): these, after about a month, it strips off, and then, being now the complete insect, it mounts quickly into the air, and flies away<sup>2</sup>. The rapidity with which a swarm of such locusts flies off is here a symbol of the rapidity with which the busy merchant population of Nineveh will melt away.

17. Thy crowned. The Heb. word occurs only here, and its meaning is uncertain. If the consonantal text is correct, this rendering may be retained (though it would be better to change the points<sup>3</sup>), the allusion being then to the diadem, or head-band, worn by the grand vizier<sup>4</sup>, and perhaps by other high Assyrian officers of state. Or the word (with the same change of punctuation) might mean thy separated (or consecrated) ones, i.e. thy princes or nobles (cf. nāšir, so rendered in Lam. iv. 6 RV., and RVm. of Gen. xlix. 26 = Dt. xxxiii. 16). But the possibility cannot be excluded that it is the Hebraized (or corrupted) form of some native Assyrian title (cf. the next note).

thy marshals. Heb. ṭiphsar, found besides only in Jer. li. 37. No doubt the Assyrian dupsarru, properly, tablet-writer, a very common word for scribe (e.g. the scribe of a contract or other deed), used here, it seems, of a military official, the muster-master, or 'marshal,' of an army; cf. the Heb. sōphēr, 'scribe,' in a similar application, Jud. v. 14 (see RVm.).

as the swarms of grasshoppers. 'As grasshoppers<sup>1</sup>.' Another of the many Heb. synonyms for 'locust<sup>2</sup>,' some of which, it seems probable, denote different species, and others the same species in different stages of its development. The usual word is arbeh (v. 15 end, v. 17 beginning): this word (gōbai) occurs besides only Am. vii. 1, and in the plural, differently pointed (gōvim), Is. xxxiii. 4<sup>3</sup>. As we have in English only one word for 'locust,' we are compelled to represent gōbai here, inexactly, by 'grasshoppers.'

where they are: i.e. to which they have fled. Locusts are benumbed by cold, their wings becoming cramped and stiff. Thomson (Land and Book, p. 418 of the one-vol. edition), describing the advance of a swarm of locusts, says that in the evenings they literally 'camped' in the hedges and loose stone walls, covering them like a swarm of bees settled on a bush: if the next day was warm, they resumed their march, but if it was cold, the majority did not move at all, and those that did move crept along very slowly and heavily. Like the locusts which, after a cold night, fly off as soon as the sun begins to warm them, so will the Assyrian leaders vanish from Nineveh.

18. Thy shepherds. Fig. of leaders and rulers, as often in Jer. (e.g. ii. 8, xxiii. 1, 2, 4), and in Ez. xxxiv, the people being frequently at the same time represented as sheep (cf. here 'are scattered upon the mountains').

slumber. In death: cf. Ps. lxxvi. 5 ('they slumber their sleep'); also Jer. li. 39, 57; Ps. xii. 3.

worthies are at rest : thy people are scattered upon the 19 mountains, and there is none to gather them. There is no assuaging of thy hurt ; thy wound is grievous : all that hear the bruit of thee clap the hands over thee ; for upon whom hath not thy wickedness passed continually ?

are at rest. A doubtful paraphrase, shākhan meaning to dwell in a place, and, used absolutely, to abide or continue (as Ps. cii. 28) but hardly (in spite of Ps. lv. 6 [Heb.]) to 'abide still.' We should doubtless, omitting one letter, read sleep.

are scattered<sup>1</sup>, &c. The fig. of a flock underlies the expressions used: cf. 1 K. xxii. 17, Ez. xxxiv. 6.

assuaging. The Heb. kēhāh cannot have this meaning<sup>2</sup> ; read probably gēhāh, healing (Prov. xvii. 22 'medicine,' RVm. 'healing').

thy hurt. Properly, thy breach, i. e., as we should say, thy wound. Cf. Am. vi. 6 (AV. and RV., discarding the figure, 'affliction') ; and especially in Jer., as vi. 14 (RVm.), viii. 21, x. 19 ('Woe is me for my breach (wound)! my stroke is grievous'), xiv. 17 ('the virgin daughter of my people is broken with a great breach, with a very grievous stroke'), xxx. 12 ('thy breach (wound) is desperate, thy stroke grievous') ; Lam. ii. 13.

thy wound is grievous. Better, thy stroke is grievous (lit. made sick) : cf. Jer. x. 19, xiv. 17, xxx. 12, just quoted.

bruit. An archaism for 'report' (Fr. bruit, 'noise'), very common in writers of the sixteenth century. See in AV. Jer. x. 22, 2 Macc. iv. 39, viii. 7 ; Troilus and Cressida, v. 9. 4 'the bruit is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles' ; and cf. Aldis Wright's Bible Word-book s. v.

INTRODUCTION

§ 1. THE PERSON OF HABAKKUK.

OF Habakkuk's<sup>1</sup> personal life nothing is known with certainty, though it has been inferred, from the fact that he is termed specifically 'the prophet,' that he held a recognized position as prophet (i. 1, iii. 1), and from the expression 'on my stringed instruments' (iii. 19), that he was a member of the temple choir, and belonged, consequently, to the tribe of Levi. The first of these inferences is a possible one, though it does not add much to our knowledge of Habakkuk. The second is doubtful, if only on account of the uncertainty attaching to the pronoun 'my,' which is against the analogy of other similar notices (Pss. iv, v, &c.), and which moreover, even if correct, may refer not to the author of the ode but to the worshipping congregation.

Although, however, little is thus to be learnt of Habakkuk from the Old Testament itself, later Jewish Haggadah had much to tell of him. The most widely diffused legend about Habakkuk, often, for example, referred to by the Fathers, is that found in Bel and the Dragon (vv. 33 ff.), according to which the prophet, while carrying pottage to his reapers, was suddenly directed by an angel to carry it to Daniel, who had been cast a second time, by Cyrus, into the lions' den in Babylon: upon protesting that he had never seen Babylon, and did not know where the den was, he was lifted up miraculously by a lock of his hair (cf. Ez. viii. 3), and carried through the air to Babylon; having there provided Daniel with his repast, he was immediately taken back by the angel to his own place. In the Codex Chisianus of the LXX<sup>1</sup>, the story of Bel and the Dragon is prefaced by the words ἐκ προφητείας Ἀμβακουμ υἱοῦ Ἰησοῦ, ἐκ τῆς φυλῆς Λευι, showing both that the story was taken from an apocryphal work attributed to Habakkuk and also that the prophet was described in it as the son of Jesus (i.e. Joshua, or Jeshua), and of the tribe of Levi. What authority there may have been for the statement about his father we do not know; the description of him as belonging to the tribe of Levi may be merely an inference from the expression in iii. 19, quoted above. According to the Lives of the Prophets, which, in two recensions, are attributed respectively to Dorotheus, Bishop of Tyre (d. 362), and Epiphanius (d. 403), he was of the tribe of Simeon, ἐξ ἀγροῦ Βηθι τοῦ Καρ (Epiph. ἐξ ἀγροῦ Βηθζοχηρ), which Delitzsch thinks may be the Beth-Zachariah of I Macc. vi. 32, 33, the modern Beit-Sakariyeh, ten miles SW. of Jerusalem, though this, it is true, would be not in Simeon, but in Judah. In the same 'Lives' it is further stated that when Nebuchadnezzar advanced against Jerusalem, Habakkuk fled to Ostrakine (now Straki), on the Egyptian coast, twenty-six miles W. of the Rhinocorura, but that, after the Chaldaeans had withdrawn, he returned to his own land, where he died and was buried, two years before the return of the Jews from Babylon in 537. Eusebius, in his Onomasticon, states in one place (p. 246) that his tomb was shown at Gabatha (Gibeah), elsewhere (pp. 256, 270), that it was shown at Echelah, or Keeila (Keilah) — twelve and eighteen miles, respectively, SW. of Jerusalem. What value all these statements possess we do not know.

§ 2. DATE OF HABAKKUK, AND CONTENTS OF HIS PROPHECY.

Habakkuk prophesied most probably about 600 B.C. The times were anxious ones ; and the perplexities and questionings to which they gave rise are reflected in his prophecy. Twenty-one years had elapsed since the discovery of Deuteronomy in the temple in the eighteenth year of Josiah (B.C. 621), and nine since the death of Josiah at Megiddo (609), when he went to oppose Pharaoh-Necho in his effort to annex all Syria as far as the Euphrates to his dominion. Jehoahaz, Josiah's third son, upon whom the popular choice fell as his successor, after a three months' reign—in the course of which, it may be presumed, he had pursued an anti-Egyptian policy—was summoned by Necho to appear before him at Riblah (on the Orontes), only to be thrown there into chains, and carried away into Egypt, while a heavy fine was imposed upon Judah. His elder brother Eliakim was then put on the throne, his name being changed by the Pharaoh to Jehoiakim. Jehoiakim was a selfish and tyrannical ruler. At a time when the country was impoverished by the collection of the tribute imposed by Necho he developed a passion for regal magnificence ; as Jeremiah tells us (xxii. 13-17), he built by the forced, but unpaid, labour of his subjects a spacious palace 'panelled with cedar, and painted with vermilion' ; he moreover abused his position to indulge in the common vices of an Oriental despot—his eyes and his heart were set only 'upon dishonest gain, and for to shed innocent blood, and for oppression and for violence, for to do it.' Nor were such crimes confined to the king. As allusions in Jeremiah show clearly, the reformation of Josiah (620) had affected the masses only superficially : though there were still faithful souls left, lawlessness, injustice, dishonesty, and oppression were only too rife in the nation at large, and idolatry was widely and openly practised (Jer. xi. 10 ff., xiv. 7, 10-12, 20; perhaps also vii. 5-11). Meanwhile, political movements of importance had been taking place in the East. In 625<sup>1</sup> Nabopolassar, a man of enterprise and energy, had become ruler of Babylon; and though at first nominally viceroy under the suzerainty of Assyria, he had in 612 or 611, if not before, declared his independence. A year or two afterwards Sin-shar-ishkun, the last king of Nineveh, invaded Babylonia for the purpose of recovering his supremacy; but the Umman-manda (p. 10), called in by Nabopolassar to assist him, overran Assyria and laid Nineveh in ruins (607). In 605 Necho, again endeavouring to assert his claim to the country west of the Euphrates, sustained a crushing defeat at Carchemish, on the upper course of the Euphrates, at the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, acting as general for his father Nabopolassar<sup>2</sup>. This victory of Nebuchadnezzar was the turning-point in the history of the age. It meant that the Chaldeans were destined to acquire supremacy over the whole of Western Asia. Jeremiah, especially, quickly perceived that this was inevitable: he accepted it at once as providentially intended, and counselled his people to accommodate themselves to circumstances, and acquiesce in a position of dependence upon the Chaldeans (Jer. xxv, xlvi). In point of fact, the countries west of the Euphrates probably at once submitted<sup>3</sup>. Jehoiakim, it is expressly stated (2 K. xxiv. 1), became Nebuchadnezzar's servant for 'three years'—though which three years these were between 605 and his death in 597 is not known: then he 'turned and rebelled against him.' The consequences of Jehoiakim's revolt were—first, the guerilla war mentioned in 2 K. xxiv. 2; next, almost immediately after

Jehoiachin's accession in 597, a siege of Jerusalem by the Chaldaeans, resulting, in the third month of Jehoiachin's reign, in the deportation of the king and the élite of the capital to Babylon; and finally—in consequence of Zedekiah's pursuing the same anti-Chaldaean policy as Jehoiachin, and refusing to listen to Jeremiah's counsels—the capture and destruction of Jerusalem, and second deportation of captives to Babylonia, in 586.

It is to be regretted that we have not further particulars of Nabopolassar's rule. Did we know more of the military expeditions in which he was engaged, we might be better able to appreciate Habakkuk's allusions to the prowess and conquests of the Chaldaeans. As it is, almost the only exploit of the Chaldaeans, prior to the two sieges of Jerusalem, of which we have actual information, is the victory over Necho at Carchemish. To judge from 2 K. xxiv. 1, the Chaldaean arms were not seen in Judah itself before 602 B. C.,—possibly, indeed, not before 598—according to the date at which the three years' vassalage mentioned in that verse terminated. Our knowledge of the times is not minute enough to enable us to fix dates with precision: but Hab. i. 5-11, it is natural to suppose, was written shortly after the battle of Carchemish in 605 (so Davidson), when the first rumours of the character and military capacities of the Chaldaeans reached Judah, but before the formidable dimensions which their power would shortly ('in your days,' v. 5) assume, had yet been realized. Hab. i. 12 ff., ii, presupposing a time when the Chaldaeans had made more conquests, and when men had become familiarized with their tyrannical treatment of subject nations, may have been written some years later (cf. p. 57), though before the end of the Chaldaean rule could be regarded as at all immediate, on account of iii. 3.

The Book of Habakkuk opens with a dialogue between the prophet and his God (cf., for the form, Jer. xiv-xv, Mic, vi, 1-vii. 6, vii. 7-20). The prophet begins (i. 2-4) by complaining to Yahweh for permitting lawlessness and social disorder to continue so long unchecked in the land. Yahweh replies (i. 5-11) by pointing to the Chaldeans, the powerful and terrible people whom He is raising up to be the ministers of judgement. But the answer involves a fresh perplexity. How can the pure and holy God employ as His instruments this proud, idolatrous nation, which destroys the righteous with the wicked, and tramples inhumanly, not upon Israel only, but upon all the nations of the known world? Is not this the prevalence of wrong upon a larger scale? (i. 12-17).

Habakkuk's complaint being ended, he places himself in imagination upon his prophetic watch-tower (cf. Is. xxi. 6), and looks out to see what answer he may receive to it (ii. 1). Yahweh's answer, the significance of which is marked by the emphasis with which it is introduced, is this: The soul of the Chaldaean is elated with pride; but the righteous will live by his faithfulness,—i.e. by his moral steadfastness and integrity (ii. 2-4). The different characters of the Chaldaean and of the righteous carry in them their different destinies: the pride of the former, it is implied in particular, will prove in the end his ruin. There follows (ii. 5-20) a series of 'woes,' in which the prophet singles out, and threatens with retribution, the crying sins of the Chaldeans—their insatiable lust of conquest, the ruthlessness with which they plundered the nations, the crimes and injustice by which they had established their empire and beautified their cities, their savage triumph over the nations which fell into their power, and their insensate idolatry.

Chap. iii consists of a lyric ode, of remarkable sublimity and poetic force, in which the poet first (v. 2) entreats Yahweh to interpose on His people's behalf, and afterwards (vv. 3-15) describes, as in a vision (v. 7), in an imaginative form, how he pictures his prayer as being answered. The prophet imagines a theophany; and depicts, in brilliant imagery, Yahweh's approach amid the accompaniments of a great thunderstorm, from His ancient seat in Edom (Dt. xxxiii. 2, Jud. v. 4), and His progress over the earth, for the deliverance of His people and the discomfiture of their foes. The poet closes (vv. 16-19) with a description of the effect which the vision of judgement wrought upon himself: on the one hand, it filled him with agitation and alarm; on the other hand, it evoked in him a joyous confidence that, whatever happened, Yahweh would remain His people's salvation.

§ 3. SOME CRITICAL QUESTIONS RELATING TO THE BOOK OF HABAKKUK.

The explanation of chap. i given above, and adopted also in the notes, is the usual one; but, as even Davidson (p. 46) admits, 'there are very great difficulties connected with the exposition of the prophecy'; and it is fair to state that it has failed to satisfy most recent scholars. Thus (a) whereas in i. 5, 6 ('Behold, I am raising up,' &c.), the advent of the Chaldaeans seems still to lie in the future, elsewhere, and especially in i. 13-17, ii. 8<sup>a</sup>, 10, 17, the prophet describes their treatment of conquered nations, and reflects upon the moral problems to which this gave rise, in a manner which seems to imply that they had been for some time on the stage of history; indeed ii. 17 ('the violence done to Lebanon shall cover thee') plainly implies that their armies had reached Palestine. (b) If i. 2-4 be the prophet's complaint respecting wrongdoing prevalent in Judah, which (i. 5-11) is to be punished by the Chaldaeans, how can he consistently complain of the Chaldaeans' treatment of his people, and pronounce judgement upon them on account of it? (c) We should expect the subject of the complaint in ii. 1 (the Chaldaeans' unjust treatment of Israel) to be the same as that of i. 2-4, whereas, upon the usual explanation of i. 2-4 (wrongdoing in Israel), it is different.

(d) The 'wicked' and the 'righteous' would naturally be the same, respectively, in i. 6 and i. 13, whereas upon the ordinary interpretation they are the wicked and the righteous in Israel in i. 4, and the Chaldaeans and Israel [or, and the righteous generally] in i. 13. Upon these grounds it was argued by Giesebrecht in 1890 that the true sequel to i. 4 was i. 12, that i. 5-11 (announcing the advent of the Chaldaeans) was a complete, independent prophecy, written before the rest of chaps. i-ii, and not now in its original place, and that i. 2-4 describes the tyranny of the Chaldaeans (vv. 2, 3<sup>a</sup>, 4<sup>b</sup>), and its effects as shown in the relaxation of law and religion in Judah (v. 4<sup>a</sup>),—the 'wicked' in v. 4<sup>b</sup> being now the Chaldaeans, and the 'righteous' Israel. Wellhausen and Nowack agree with Giesebrecht, treating i. 5-11 as the older prophecy, and regarding i. 2, 3<sup>a</sup>, 4<sup>a</sup>, 4<sup>b</sup> as continued by i. 12<sup>a</sup> (to 'mine Holy One'<sup>1</sup>), 13-17, &c.; also, in so far as they hold i. 5-11 to be out of place where it now stands, Budde and G. A. Smith (see p. 58).

There is unquestionably force in Giesebrecht's argument; and were it not for the interpretation of i. 2-4 which it involves, the present writer would not hesitate to accept his conclusion. But though the 'violence' &c. of vv. 2, 3<sup>a</sup>, 4<sup>b</sup> might in the abstract denote the tyranny of the Chaldaeans, how can the 'strife' and 'contention' of v. 3<sup>c</sup>, and the slack tōrāh and perverted judgement of v. 4<sup>a</sup>,<sup>c</sup>, be regarded naturally as the effects of it? Nowack, feeling these difficulties, follows Wellhausen in expunging vv. 3<sup>c</sup>, 4<sup>c</sup> as glosses, and understanding tōrāh and mishpāt in v. 4<sup>a</sup> as merely synonyms for religion generally (Is. xlii. 1, 4, li. 4), which, in consequence of the Chaldaeans' triumph over Judah, came to be questioned or rejected. But the excision of vv. 3<sup>c</sup>, 4<sup>c</sup> is a violent measure; and Is. xlii. 1, 4, li. 4 are a doubtful support for this generalized sense of tōrāh and mishpāt. On the other hand, it is true that i. 5-11 does seem to spring out of a different historical situation from i. 13-17, ii. 5 ff. For those who cannot accept the view just mentioned, perhaps the simplest explanation of the fact will be to suppose that i. 2-4 (as ordinarily understood), 5-11 was actually written by Habakkuk before i. 12 ff.: the book, as Kirkpatrick observes<sup>1</sup>, 'is the fruit of religious reflection, and exhibits the communing and questioning of the prophet's soul with God,' which may represent a prolonged mental struggle, and have extended over a considerable time (notice the terms of i. 2): thus i. 2-11 may reflect the impression left upon his mind, when he first thought of the Chaldaeans as appointed for the punishment of Israel's sin, and i. 12 ff. may express the perplexity which he became conscious of afterwards when the character of the Chaldaeans became more fully known to him. Other suggestions that have been made are (Baudissin, Eint. p. 540) that Habakkuk in i. 5-11 quotes an older prophecy of the rise of the Chaldaeans, for the purpose of thus indirectly pointing to the astonishing character of their 'work' as Yahweh's ministers, although this work when he wrote was an accomplished fact; or (Kuenen, Davidson, pp. 48, 49 f., 55—though allowing this construction of the book to be somewhat artificial) that the prophet (whose main object is to foretell the fall of the Chaldaeans) may describe the moral cause of their rise by dramatically representing it as having been revealed to him by Yahweh in the past. Any one of these suppositions would remove what is the great difficulty of chap. i, by throwing back i. 5-11 to a date anterior to i. 12 ff. Nor does there seem to be any intrinsic reason why 'righteous' and 'wicked' should refer to the same persons, respectively, in i. 4 and i. 13: the prophet might indeed describe Israel (i. 13) as relatively 'more righteous than' the Chaldaeans; but would a contemporary of Jeremiah speak of Israel absolutely as 'the righteous'? (i. 4).

On Budde's very original view of Hab. i-ii,—viz. that i. 2-4, 12-17, ii. 5-20 referred originally to the Assyrians, and was only afterwards accommodated to the Chaldaeans, and that the original order was i. 2-4, 12-17, ii. 1-4, i. 6-11 (the Chaldaeans announced as the destroyers of the Assyrians); ii. 5-20 (woes directed against the Assyrians),—followed virtually by G. A. Smith, pp. 119 ff., 132 ff.: see his article 'Habakkuk' in EB., and the criticisms of Davidson, pp. 50 ff., and of Peake in The Problem of Suffering in the O. T. (1904), pp. 4-11, 151 ff. (who himself agrees substantially with Giesebrecht). Another solution of the problem of Hab. i-ii is offered by W. B. Stevenson, Expositor, May 1902, pp. 388 ff. (i. 2-4, 12-13, and i. 5-11, 14-17 [with 'and he maketh' for 'and makest' in v. 14,—the change in the Hebrew is only of one letter], two distinct, unconnected prophecies).

Marti, the most recent commentator upon Habakkuk, considers the elements contained in the book to be too dissimilar for its unity to be maintained; and analyses chaps. i-ii as follows:—

1. The genuine prophecy of Habakkuk, announcing the appearance of the Chaldaeans upon the stage of history, and dating shortly after the battle of Carchemish (B. C. 605), i. 5-10, 14 [with 'and he maketh']-16. Vv. 11 [the verbs being translated as pasts], 12<sup>b</sup> (from 'O LORD'), 17 are later additions, written at a time when the victories of the Chaldaeans were matter of history.

2. A series of woes directed against the excesses of the Chaldaeans, and announcing their approaching fall, ii. 5-19 (with a few glosses; v. 20 is a later addition, leading on to ch. iii). These 'woes' could not have been written 'in the same breath' with No. 1, which announces the Chaldaeans as appointed by Yahweh to execute judgement upon Judah, but must date from a time considerably later, when their empire was waning to its close (c. 540) [? later than is necessary].

3. A psalm (post-exilic), dealing with the problem arising out of the sufferings of the righteous, and stating the solution which the prophet received, i. 2-4, 12<sup>a</sup> (to 'Holy One'), 13, ii. 1-4. The present disarrangement of the text of the Psalm is ingeniously explained by the supposition that it was written originally on the three margins of the manuscript containing i. 5-10, 14-16, from which it was carelessly incorporated into the text by a scribe.

Marti undoubtedly succeeds in extracting from chaps. i-ii three consistent and logical wholes; but the dislocation which has to be postulated for No. 3 is too improbable. On the whole, the reader will perhaps be disposed to agree with Prof. Davidson when he says (p. 55) that the ordinary view of chaps. i-ii,—at least with the slight modification suggested above on p. 57,—‘has the fewest difficulties.’

(2) In chap. ii many recent scholars have thought some, or even all, of the taunts in vv. 9-20 to be not part of the original prophecy of Habakkuk, but exilic, or post-exilic, additions. The grounds for these conclusions are, however, too slight to need detailed discussion here. They are strongest, perhaps, in the case of vv. 12-14, which it is urged, are deficient in originality, being in substance little more than variations of Mic. iii. 10, Jer. li. 58 (late exilic), and Isa. xi. 9. Habakkuk himself may, however, have adapted phrases from Micah and Isaiah; and, as Jer. l. 2-li. 58 is, from a literary point of view, anything but an original composition, it is at least equally probable that Jer. li. 58 is borrowed from Hab. ii. 13. See further Davidson pp. 56-58; DB. ii. 271.

(3) Whether the ode in chap. iii is really the work of Habakkuk may be more doubtful. The title and the musical notes (vv. 3, 9, 13, 19), both resembling closely those in the Psalter, suggest the inference that it was excerpted from a liturgical collection (in which it was already attributed to Habakkuk), and placed here by a compiler on account of its title (Kuenen, Wellhausen, Nowack, Marti, and others). It is further argued that the ode was originally an independent poem, unconnected with the prophecy of Habakkuk: it contains no allusions to the circumstances of Habakkuk's age, so clearly reflected in chaps. i-ii: the community is the speaker (vv. 14, 18, 19, and no doubt also in vv. 2, 16); it trusts that Yahweh will interpose in its behalf; but the descriptions of the foe (vv. 13, 14) are quite general, without any features pointing specifically to the Chaldaeans; and the comparison to a murderer delighting ‘to devour the afflicted in a secret place’ (cf. Ps. x. 8, 9) suggests attacks made insidiously against the theocracy, rather than the open warfare of the Chaldaeans; while, at least in v. 17, the calamities referred to (failure of crops and flocks) are altogether different from those which were the burden of Hab. i-ii. The ode thus does not seem to reflect the historical situation of Hab. i-ii. Conversely, the promise in ii. 4, which is the prophet's consolation, does not at all suggest a theophany as its complement; and whereas in ii. 7 ff. the Chaldaeans are overthrown by the natural retribution which overtakes a despot when his power has become effete, the foe, in chap. iii, is overthrown by the direct interposition of Yahweh. No doubt it is true that the downfall of the Chaldaeans, though brought about by natural causes (ii. 7-8, &c.), might be represented as the result of a direct divine intervention (cf. Is. ii. 12 ff., xiii. 4 ff.); but even after making every allowance for the fact that chaps. i-ii are only elevated prose, while chap. iii is written in a lyric strain, it remains that the thoughts most characteristic of chaps. i-ii are not developed further in chap. iii, but are replaced by new ones. Wellhausen insists strongly that vv. 17-19 are not the original close of the poem, and that they cannot be used for determining the real aim and scope of vv. 2-16. If vv. 17-19 might be regarded as an appendix attached to vv. 2-16 by a later hand, one ground for doubting Habakkuk's authorship of the poem as a whole would certainly disappear. There would remain the other differences between chap. iii and chaps. i-ii, adverted to above; it is also doubtful whether the nation—supposing this to be intended by the term—would, before the monarchy had ceased to exist, be described as Yahweh's 'anointed' (v. 13). On the whole, however reluctant we may be to conclude that the ode in chap. iii is not the work of Habakkuk, it must be admitted that it contains features which make it difficult to affirm his authorship confidently (cf. Davidson, pp. 58 f.).

§ 4. THE THEOLOGICAL TEACHING OF THE BOOK.

Theologically, the different point of view of Habakkuk, as compared with Jeremiah, ought to be noticed. Jeremiah is so deeply impressed by the spectacle of his people's sin that he regards the Chaldaeans almost exclusively as the instruments of judgement; their destruction is seen by him only in the distant future, and is viewed rather as involved in God's purpose to restore His people than as a retribution for their own tyranny and excesses. Habakkuk, on the other hand, though not unmindful of Judah's faults (i. 2-4), is engrossed chiefly by the thought of the cruelties and inhumanities of the oppressor: an empire founded upon brutality and injustice is, in his eyes, doomed to fall; and the outraged nations of the earth execute the doom upon their tyrant, and give vent to their elation at his fall. Further, Habakkuk is conscious of a problem, a moral difficulty, which is not the case with Jeremiah<sup>1</sup>. The wrongdoing of the Chaldaeans is more unbearable than the evil it was meant to punish: hence their continued successes seem to the prophet inconsistent with Yahweh's righteousness, and it is the existence of this inconsistency which forms the motive of his book. Thus while Jeremiah bewailed the sins and coming misfortunes of his people, for their own sake, Habakkuk brooded over the moral problems which the contemplation of them raised in his mind. The age, we may be sure, was to all the faithful servants of God one of trial and perplexity; but, in virtue of their different temperaments and mental habits, the two contemporary prophets were impressed by different aspects of it, and were moved to extract from it different lessons.

the declaration of ii. 4 'Behold, his soul is puffed up, it is not even in him; but the just will live by his faithfulness'<sup>1</sup>; and (as is shown in the note ad loc.) the true sense of this is that, while the wild excesses of the tyrant carry in them the germs of certain ruin, the 'faithfulness' of the righteous—i. e. his honesty, integrity, trustworthiness—will be to him a principle of life. It is evident that this declaration is no solution of the moral anomaly which the prophet discerns. The empire of the Chaldeans might indeed, in virtue of its very nature, be doomed ultimately to perish: but it survived for sixty years; and meanwhile Habakkuk's compatriots, so far from abiding in peace and security, experienced the indescribable hardships of siege and exile. But 'live' is here used in the full and pregnant sense, which it has sometimes in the O. T. (e. g. in Ezek. xviii), of living in the light and consciousness of divine favour; and what Habakkuk promises is thus not mere material prosperity, but the moral security—of course often not unaccompanied by material happiness—which righteousness brings with it and secures, even in the midst of external calamities, and the sense of divine approval which, happen what may, never deserts it. The righteous man, even in normal conditions of society, endures where others fall; he escapes where others, as a consequence of their imperfect moral nature, are brought to ruin; while, even if calamities overtake him, he is still conscious of a moral triumph. It is enough for Habakkuk if he can mitigate the difficulty which pressed upon him, as it pressed, no doubt, upon many of his contemporaries, by recalling to them these two truths of God's providence—the doom which, if they will but wait patiently (ii. 3), they will find at last overtakes the tyrant, and the moral, if not the physical, security enjoyed by the righteous.

In the New Testament the second clause of Hab. ii. 4 is quoted twice by St. Paul (Rom. i. 17, Gal. iii. 11), in the sense, 'The just shall live by faith,' in support of his doctrine of justification by faith; and the last clause of v. 3, and the whole of v. 4, almost as it stands in the LXX version (see below, p. 77), is quoted in Heb. x. 37 f., also to illustrate the benefits of 'faith.' This sense, though it can hardly have been intended by the LXX translators<sup>1</sup>, whose version the Apostles used, was at any rate one which the Greek word used by them permitted; and it was accordingly adopted by St. Paul in his argument, and also by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews in Heb. x. 38,—the pronoun 'my,' which is unfavourable to this interpretation, being omitted by St. Paul, and attached to 'righteous' in Heb. x. 38. But 'faith' is not the sense belonging to 'ἐμῆνᾱh. This does not mean that principle of trustful reliance upon another which we call 'faith,' but the quality of being oneself firm, steady, reliable in intercourse with others, i.e. trustworthiness, or 'faithfulness.' 'A man of faithfulness,' it is said in Prov. xxviii. 20, 'aboundeth in blessings.' 'Lying lips,' says another proverb (Prov. xii. 22), 'are an abomination to the LORD, but they that do faithfulness

Πίστις, in the sense of 'faith,' is construed in the N. T. with a genitive of the person who is its object (e. g. Gal. ii. 16, 20, iii. 22; Phil. iii. 9): but the sense is there clear from the context, and the known use of the word by St. Paul; it could scarcely be so understood in the LXX of Hab. ii. 4.

are his delight.' The men to whom money was given for the repair of the Temple 'dealt in faithfulness,' i.e. honestly (2 K. xii. 15 [Heb. 16], xxii. 7). 'Faithfulness' was an attribute of the ideal king, in his exalted office (Is. xi. 5). It was also a virtue which, Jeremiah tells us, though earnestly sought for by Yahweh, was sadly lacking in Jerusalem in his day (Jer. v. 1, 3, vii. 28, ix. 3,—all RVm.). The word is also used often of God's 'faithfulness' (Is. xxv. 1; Ps. lxxxix. 1, 2, 24, 33, &c.)<sup>1</sup>. The New Testament gives us what is really a development of the prophet's thought. St. Paul, familiar with the verse as it read in the LXX version, amplifies and spiritualizes the words of Habakkuk—as he does sometimes with other passages quoted by him from the O.T.—interpreting them in a sense which does not properly belong to them, but which, as it was permitted, or suggested, by the Greek, fitted them in that form for use in his argument. And the passage is interpreted similarly in Heb. x. 38.

<sup>1</sup> Wellh. and Nowack understand אֱמוּנָה in Hab. ii. 4 in the sense of faithful allegiance to God, in the firm assurance that in the end (cf. v. 3) the righteous cause will triumph, and the tyrant be overthrown. But, though a word, expressing the idea of steadfastness or faithfulness, might, no doubt, if limited to a relation towards a particular person, pass into that of fidelity or loyalty towards him, the O. T. furnishes no evidence that אֱמוּנָה ever acquired this meaning.

HABAKKUK

THE <sup>a</sup>burden which Habakkuk the prophet did see. 1 [H] O LORD, how long shall I cry, and thou wilt not <sup>2</sup> hear? I cry out unto thee of violence, and thou wilt not save. Why dost thou shew me iniquity, and <sup>b</sup>look upon 3

1. 1. The oracle . . . did see. See the first two notes on Nah. i. 1.
 The Book opens with a dialogue between the prophet and his God. The dialogue extends into ch. ii; and the subject of it is the moral difficulty which the prophet feels in Yahweh's first allowing lawlessness to prevail unchecked in Judah, and then entrusting the punishment of it to a cruel and godless nation like the Chaldeans.

2-4. The prophet expostulates with Yahweh for permitting wrong to continue so long unchecked in Judah.

2. How long, O Yahweh, do I cry for help, and thou hearest not? I cry unto thee, Violence! and thou dost not save.

The word rendered 'cry' in the first clause means always to cry for help: it occurs frequently in the Psalms, e.g. Ps. xviii. 6<sup>a</sup> 41, xxii. 24: cf. Job xix. 7<sup>b</sup>. With clause b cf. Job xix. 7, (RVm.), Jer. xx. 8. The complaint of the prophet is no doubt more than a merely personal one: he cries out in the name of his faithful compatriots, who have to suffer equally with himself from the violence and injustice of the wicked. To judge from the terms of the verse, the prophet has felt this moral anomaly long and keenly.

3. God the Holy One seems to look on quietly, and permit injustice and wrong to pass unpunished.

shew me: better, cause me to see—i. e. to behold it around me iniquity: 'āven is not the regular Heb. word for 'iniquity,' but is a term of disparagement, meaning properly, it seems, worthless conduct, naughtiness. It occurs frequently in the Psalms. See the writer's Parallel Psalter, pp. 449 f.

and look upon: viz. without interfering to punish it. Contrast v. 13, Ps. x. 14. But probably, changing a letter, we should read with Targ., Pesh. 'and (why) do I look upon?'

perverseness? for spoiling and violence are before me:
 4 and there is strife, and contention riseth up. Therefore the law is slacked, and judgement <sup>a</sup> doth never go forth:

perverseness. Rather mischief, or, more clearly, oppression: cf. Is. x. 1. 'Āmāl is properly labour, toil (Gen. xli. 51); then fig. travail (Is. liii. 11), trouble, whether experienced by oneself (Ps. lxxiii. 5), or prepared for others, and in the latter case commonly, for clearness, rendered mischief (Ps. vii. 4, 16, &c.). Here the sequel shows that the latter is the sense intended; for the combination with 'āven, as here, cf. Ps. x. 7, lv. 10 (in a city).

spoiling and violence. So Am. iii. 10; Jer. vi. 7, xx. 8; Ez. xlv. 9. 'Spoiling' (Heb. shōd: 'destruction,' Isa. xiii. 6; 'desolation,' li. 19, lix. 7) means violent ill-treatment; 'violence,' wrong or injury, whether accompanied by force or not (vv. 2, 9, ii. 8, 17; Gen. xvi. 5, &c.).

and there is strife, &c. The consequences of so much violence and wrong: society is unsettled; disputes arise, and instead of being decided by law, they are perpetuated and spread. For the two words used see Prov. xv. 18, xxvi. 21.

4. Therefore direction is numb. The disorder and lawlessness prevalent in Judah incapacitated even the priests in the discharge of their duties. Tôrāh was the 'direction' given orally by the priest, chiefly on points of ritual observance, but including also a moral element: on the importance attached to it, and for other allusions to neglect in regard to it, see Mic. iii. 11; Dt. xvii. 11 (of judicial decisions), xxiv. 8; Jer. ii. 8, xviii. 18; Zeph. iii. 4; Ez. vii. 26, xxii. 26; Mal. ii. 6-9 (in EVV. 'law' and 'teach,' but 'direction' and 'direct' would be better). See further the article 'Law' in DB., p. 65; and on Hag. ii. 11.

numb: i. e. chilled and paralysed, bereft of life and force, inefficient. Cf. Ps. xxxviii. 8 (RV. 'am faint'), lxxvii. 2 (RV. 'slacked').

judgement doth never go forth: i. e. right (Is. x. 2), both in a forensic sense, and also in social life generally, does not come forth (Ps. xvii. 2, xxxvii. 6) and assert itself, as it should do: cf. Is. lix. 14, and the picture in Mic. vii. 2-6, or Jer. ix. 3-5.

The rendering of the margin is derived from the Aramaic sense of the root, to conquer, be victorious, which the word here used has in the late Hebrew of 1 Ch. xxix. 11, and which is also given to it in the Greek version of Is. xxv. 8 (which agrees with that of Theodotion), followed by St. Paul in 1 Cor. xv. 54, 'death is swallowed up in victory' (cf. Hab. iii. 19, LXX τοῦ νικῆσαι for לִמְצוֹחַ).

for the wicked doth compass about the righteous; therefore judgement goeth forth perverted. Behold ye among 5 the nations, and regard, and wonder marvellously: for <sup>a</sup> I work a work in your days, which ye will not believe though it be told you. For, lo, I raise up the Chaldeans, that 6

compass about. In a hostile sense (Ps. xxii. 12), at once depriving him of his rights, and limiting his influence for good.

5-11. The answer of Yahweh to the prophet's complaint: already He is raising up the ministers of judgement, the Chaldaeans, a people mighty and terrible, imperious and all-subduing.

5. Behold ye among the nations: viz. to see what is there happening, to watch the storm of judgement arising, and advancing from nation to nation, till finally it breaks upon you (Jer. xxv. 32). 'Ye' (i. e. the Judahites) is to be taken closely with 'behold': the meaning is not 'Ye among the nations, behold.' Perhaps, however, with Nowack, Marti, and others, we should read, following the LXX, 'Behold, ye faithless ones'<sup>1</sup> (i. e. ye faithless Judahites), and regard.'

I work. The marg. is added for a grammatical reason. 'Work' is in the Hebrew a participle, with no subject expressed; and in such cases a subject in the third person, not in the first, is usually understood (G.-K. § 116<sup>a</sup>, <sup>b</sup>). The general sense remains the same: for even though the grammatical subject be 'one,' the real agent is still implicitly Yahweh.

work a work. Both words are often used of a Divine operation, especially of one on a large scale: iii. 2; Is. v. 12; Ps. xlv. 1, lxiv. 9, xc. 16, xcv. 9.

ye will not believe, &c. Better, ye would not believe (viz. under other circumstances), though it were told you, i. e. unless you had express evidence of it. The following verses describe what this work is, viz. the establishment of the power of the Chaldaeans, with indirect allusion to the manner in which that would affect Judah.

6. For, lo, I am raising up. The words cannot refer to the first appearance of the Chaldaeans upon the stage of history (for Nabopolassar had been upon the throne of Babylon for some twenty years) ; but the Chaldaean were for the Jews a new power—they had just gained a great victory over Egypt, and the expression rather means ‘am raising up so as to establish and confirm.’ The partic. after lo (or behold), as often, especially in prophecy, of the imminent future.

the Chaldaean (Heb. Kasdim). Kasdim is the Heb. form of the Bab. and Ass. Kaldû (Χαλδαῖοι, ‘Chaldaean’), a tribe often mentioned in the Assyrian Inscriptions from about 880 B.C. : their home at that time was in Lower Babylonia (the Persian Gulf is called the ‘sea of the land of the Kaldû’); afterwards, becoming more powerful, they gradually advanced inland ; in 721 Merodach-baladan, ‘king of the land of the Kaldû,’ as he is called in the inscriptions, made himself for twelve years king of Babylon (cf. Is. xxxix. 1) ; and ultimately, under Nabopolassar (above, pp. 9, 52) and Nebuchadnezzar, the Kaldû became the ruling caste in Babylon. After Jehoiakim’s revolt (2 K. xxiv. 1) they became the most formidable enemies of Judah ; and in the end (B.C. 586) destroyed Jerusalem.

bitter : i. e. fierce, unpleasant to those who come in contact with it : cf. bitter of soul = angry, enraged : Jud. xviii. 25, 2 S. xvii. 8.

which march, &c. Their object is conquest, to seize for a possession the dwelling-places of other peoples. The verbs and pronouns from here to the end of v. 11 (except v. 9 ‘their faces’) are all singular in the Heb.) ‘which marcheth . . . that are not its. It is terrible,’ &c.), the nation being treated as a single whole. Similarly elsewhere, as Is. v. 26–30 (see R.Vm.), xvii. 13, 14 (R.Vm.), Jer. v. 16<sup>a</sup>, 17 (Heb.).

7. The formidable character of this nation : its military strength inspires terror into other peoples, and in its policy it is guided by no considerations except those proceeding from itself.

its right, &c. It is an imperious and autocratic nation : its right—the word (mishpāt) means properly the decision of a judge, and is then used in an extended sense of right, both legal and moral (cf. Is. x. 2 ; Jer. v. 28, xvii. 11)—and its dignity (Gen. xlix. 3) or loftiness (Job xiii. 11, xxxi. 23 [E.V. badly, excellency])—i. e. its pre-eminence above other nations—proceed from itself, have their root only in itself, not in God : it owns no superior.

their dignity proceed from themselves. Their horses also 8 8-10. Their armies advance swiftly, and are irresistible.

His horses are swifter than leopards (ממריס). Varied from Jer. iv. 13 'His horses are swifter than eagles (משורים).' The leopard is noted both for the swiftness of its course and also for the celerity with which it springs upon its prey<sup>1</sup>: it 'will take up its station in concealment by a village or watering-place, and await for hours its opportunity of pouncing upon the cattle' (Tristram, NHB. 112: cf. Jer. v. 6; Hos. xiii. 7).

are keener (viz. in attack: lit. 'sharper') than evening wolves. Wolves in the East conceal themselves during day, but prowl forth at nightfall and watch their opportunity of leaping suddenly into the fold, and seizing a sheep (Tristram, NHB. 152-4).
Cf. Zeph. iii. 3.

spread themselves. This rendering, retained from AV., has no probability: RVm. bear themselves proudly, though not, perhaps, certain, is decidedly preferable; the correctness of the text, however, is not entirely above suspicion<sup>2</sup>.

from far, like the eagle (cf. Dt. xxviii. 49 'from the end of the earth'), and, like the eagle, they light on the prey that they intend to devour. For the comparison cf. Dt. xxviii. 49; Jer. iv. 13, xlviii. 40 = xlix. 22 (of Nebuchadnezzar); Lam. iv. 19.

'Ἰκνύτατον θείει, καὶ τ' ἄλκιμον ἰθὺς ὀρούει, φαίης ὀππότε ἴδοιο διηερίην φορέεσθαι.

l. 10 (RV. are wanton), Mal. iv. 2 (RV. gambol). In Arabic פָּרַשׁ means to glory, boast, magnify oneself; and this meaning would suit the three passages, but the sibilant in the Heb. does not correspond as it should do. Possibly, however, the Massorites are at fault in pointing פָּ. Here, however, the entire clause (וְפָרְשׁוּ פָּרְשׁוּ), which makes the verse unduly long, is open to the suspicion of being a corrupt anticipation of the following פָּרְשׁוּ; and we should perhaps read, with Wellh., Marti (after 'leopards'), 'and their horsemen are keener than evening wolves; they come from far,' &c.

however, the carrion-vulture, but the great vulture, or Griffon-vulture, a majestic bird constantly visible in Palestine, as it circles higher and higher in the heavens, and then rapidly (Lam. iv. 19; Job ix. 26) swoops down upon its prey (Tristram, NHB. 172-179).

9. their faces, &c. A most uncertain clause. Assuming the text to be correct, the most probable rendering would be (cf. RVm.), the assembling<sup>1</sup> of their faces is eastwards; but, as 'eastwards' is unsuitable, in view of the relative situations of Babylon and Judah, the very questionable alternative forwards (marg.) has been proposed. There must be some deep-rooted error in the text. No plausible emendation has hitherto been suggested.

10. The Chaldaean mocks at all attempts to check his advance: kings and princes oppose him in vain, and every fortress he quickly reduces.

he heapeth up dust, and taketh it. His means are simple—nothing more than 'dust'—but effectual. The allusion is to the ancient method of taking cities by throwing up a long mound of earth from the lines of the besiegers, until it rose to the level of the city walls, so that the assailants, advancing along its top, could fight their way in. The technical expression is to 'throw up a mound' (spelt in EVV. mount): 2 K. xix. 32; Jer. vi. 6 al.

11. Then he sweepeth on like a wind, and passeth through, nésher—a description satisfied by the Griffon-vulture, the head and neck of which are bald, and covered with down, instead of feathers, but not by the eagle (Tristram, NHB. 173).

and becometh guilty: this his might becometh his god. The fortress taken ('Then'), he sweeps on like a hurricane in his career of conquest; and, elated by victory, deifies his own might (Dextra mihi deus). The margins of RV. may be disregarded. But the text in parts of clause a is suspicious; and the correction (one letter only), and maketh this his strength to be his god, for 'and becometh guilty,' &c., is at least very probable.

12-17. But a fresh difficulty now arises: granted that Israel deserves punishment, how can the righteous Ruler of the world employ as His ministers this proud, idolatrous nation, which tramples down inhumanly and indiscriminately all men alike? Is this righteous judgement? Is it not rather the triumph of violence on a larger scale?

12. Can it be that Yahweh means Israel to perish? Surely He cannot intend that the Chaldaeans should do more than correct it? Cf. the same distinction in Jer. xxx. 11.

Art Thou not from of old, Yahweh, my God, mine Holy One? i. e. ('Yahweh' being the predicate) 'Art Thou not our national God, Yahweh, from of old?' The prophet in using the pronouns of the 1st pers. sing. speaks in the name of the nation: and, from the fact that Yahweh, the faithful and unchangeable One, has been from of old the national God of Israel (Hos. xiii. 4 RVm.), argues ('we shall not die') that it cannot be His intention that Israel should perish at the hands of the Chaldaeans.

from of old: lit. 'from before' or 'from aforetime.' The expression denotes what is ancient rather than what is eternal: it is often used, for instance, of the Mosaic age or other distant periods of Israel's past (e. g. Ps. xlv. 1, lxxiv. 2, 12); it is applied to God, as here, Dt. xxxiii. 27 ('The God of old is a dwelling place'), Ps. lv. 19<sup>1</sup>.

mine Holy One: adapted from Isaiah's title of Yahweh, the 'Holy One of Israel,' Is. i. 4, v. 19, 24, &c.

we shall not die. According to Jewish tradition (cf. RVm.), this is one of eighteen passages called 'corrections of the scribes' (tikkūnē sōpherim), i. e. passages in which the original reading was supposed to have been altered by the scribes on account of its

him for judgement; and thou, O <sup>a</sup>Rock, hast established 13 him for correction. Thou that art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and that canst not look on perverseness, wherefore lookest thou upon them that deal treacherously, and holdest thy peace when the wicked swalloweth

containing something which appeared to them to be unseemly or irreverent. The passages must be considered each on its own merits: in some cases, there may be some support for the allegation; in others, it is probably nothing more than a Jewish fancy. Here the original reading is alleged to have been 'Thou wilt not die,' changed to 'We shall not die,' on account of the irreverence implied in bringing together the ideas of God and death. The context, however, in this case lends no support to the view that this was the original reading; the deduction 'We shall not die' is necessary to give point to the verse.

thou hast ordained, &c. 'Judgement' and 'correction' are the emphatic words: the Chaldaean, the prophet would fain believe, has been appointed by Yahweh to judge and correct Israel, but not to exterminate it (Jer. xxx. 11).

Rock. A poetical title of God, designating Him as the unchangeable support or refuge of His people—usually the Rock of Israel, or his, my, their Rock, or the Rock of his (thy) salvation, Dt. xxxii. 4 ('the Rock'), 15, 18, 30; 2 S. xxiii. 3; and often in the Psalms, as Ps. xviii. 2, 31, 47, xix. 14.

13. How, moreover, can Yahweh, the pure and Holy God, look on with unconcern (v. 3) while the Chaldaean outrages all right and justice?

perverseness. Rather, as v. 3, mischief, or oppression. The 'evil' and 'mischief' are here those wrought by the Chaldaeans.

them that deal treacherously: i. e. faithlessly, unconscionably, viz. in war. The expression is used also in Is. xxi. 2, xxiv. 16, xxxiii. 1, of ruthless, barbarous plunderers. Here it refers of course to the Chaldaeans.

holdest thy peace. Lookest on silently, without interfering: cf. Is. xlii. 14; Ps. l. 21.

the wicked. The 'wicked' is here (otherwise than in v. 4) the Chaldaean: the 'man that is more righteous than he' 'is generalized to include the other nations, victims of the Chaldaean barbarities, though Israel may be specially in the prophet's mind. But in vv. 12-17 the prophet speaks out of the heart of humanity. The anomaly is that the righteous God, whose nature cannot up the man that is more righteous than he; and makest 14 men as the fishes of the sea, as the creeping things, that have no ruler over them? He taketh up all of them with 15 the angle, he catcheth them in his net, and gathereth them in his drag: therefore he rejoiceth and is glad.

 Therefore he sacrificeth unto his net, and burneth in- 16 endure wrong, looks on and is silent over this wrong which is as large as the human race' (Davidson).

14-16. The prophet's thought illustrated by a simile. Men are become like fishes, which the Chaldaean sweeps into his net, paying afterwards Divine honours to the instrument which thus enriches him.

14. and makest. Rather, and hast made. The condition is one which has already begun. It might be that the Chaldaeans were appointed to 'correct' (v. 12): but they had exceeded the terms of their commission (cf. Is. xlvii. 6); they had reduced men to the condition of fishes, without organization, without leaders, helpless before their captors. The prophet, with that disregard of secondary causes which is characteristic of Hebrew thinkers (cf. Am. iii. 6; Job ix. 24), boldly charges God with being the cause of all the outrages inflicted upon mankind by the Chaldaeans.

creeping things. An expression generally denoting reptiles (Gen. i. 26, vi. 7; 1 K. iv. 33), but used also of small aquatic creatures, Ps. civ. 25 ('wherein are things creeping innumerable'). It might be meant here in the former sense, as a parallel among land-animals to the 'fishes of the sea'; but the context, especially v. 15, rather favours the supposition that small marine animals are intended,—or at least that they are included in the expression.

in his drag. The Heb. word occurs only here, v. 16, and (with one vowel different) Is. xix. 8 ('nets'): LXX here and in one rendering of Is. xix. 8, σαγήνη, i. e. a large drag-net, or seine (Ital. sagena), whence the verb σαγήνῃω, to 'sweep clear' a conquered country (Hdt. iii. 149 al.).

he rejoiceth, &c. Exulting over his successful haul.

16. The Chaldaean deifies the instruments—i. e. his weapons of war—to which he owes his successes. Herod. (iv. 59, 60) states that the Scythians offered a yearly sacrifice of sheep and horses to the scimitar as the symbol of the war-god Ares: but whether a knowledge of this fact suggested the figure used by the prophet is uncertain; it may merely be another more pointed way of stating what was said before in v. 11, that the Chaldaean cense unto his drag; because by them his portion is fat, 17 and his meat <sup>a</sup>plenteous. Shall he therefore empty his net, and not spare to slay the nations continually?

2 I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the so trusted in the material strength of his empire and army that it became to him his god. The description is spoken from the standpoint of a Hebrew prophet: the inscriptions of Nabopolassar (B. C. 625-605), and of his son Nebuchadnezzar, one of whom must have been on the throne when Habakkuk wrote, show that both were loyal and devoted worshippers of Marduk, Nebo, and Shamash, who, if their inscriptions had recorded victories, would, we may be sure, have gratefully attributed them to their help.

his portion is rich, and his food fat: i. e. his catch of 'fish,' fig. for the gains accruing to him from his conquests. In the Heb. there are two synonyms for 'fat,' which are perhaps best distinguished by the renderings here given. Meat in RV. (= AV.) is used in the now obsolete sense of the word (except in 'sweetmeat') for food generally, not animal food in particular: so often in EVV., as iii. 17; Gen. i. 29; Is. lxii. 8.

17. Render: Shall he therefore—viz. because he thus rejoices over his gains, and honours his net as a god—empty his net (and, it is implied, go on casting it and filling it again), and shall he continually slay nations unsparingly? Giesebrecht, however, followed by Wellh., Now., Smith, Marti, making two slight changes, suggests, very cleverly, Shall he for ever draw his sword, and continually slay nations unsparingly? This yields a better sense than the Massoretic text, and may well be the original reading. For the rendering draw (of a sword), see Ex. xv. 9, Lev. xxvi. 33 al.

11. 1-4. The prophet's 'complaint' (in ch. i) respecting the justice of God's government of the world, is ended; and he waits patiently, like a watchman on his out-look tower, to see what answer the Almighty may vouchsafe to it.

1. A soliloquy of the prophet. The figure is that of a watchman mounting a high tower in order to see afar (2 S. xviii. 24; 2 K. ix. 17); and it expresses the spiritual preparation of the prophet's soul, the earnest expectation with which he waits for the Divine answer: he will retire from the distracting crowd, will direct his gaze to heaven, and look out till the answer comes.

I will stand, &c. The prophet describes indirectly what he has done by citing the resolve which he had made to do it.

vii. 6 ('the priests were standing upon their posts'). Exactly so, Is. xxi. 8, in a similar connexion (EVV. ward).

the tower. Better, the muniment: cf. Nah. ii. 1—some part of the fortifications on which a watchman might naturally place himself.

look forth: viz. as a watchman, the word being that of which the ordinary Heb. word for 'watchman' is the participle: cf. the term 'watchman' used of the prophets, Jer. vi. 17; Mic. vii. 4; Ez. iii. 17; Is. lvi. 10; and see especially Is. xxi. 6-9.

with me. This is better than the marg. by me: cf. Zech. i. 9; and see Dr. Gray's note on Num. xii. 2.

what I shall answer to my complaint, or, better, to my reproof (Pr. i. 23, and often), or impeachment, viz. of God, that He leaves the wicked unpunished, and even entrusts to him the punishment of the righteous (i. 13-17). Pesh. for 'I shall answer' has he will answer, which agrees better with 'he will speak,' and is probably correct.

2. Yahweh's answer, heard by the prophet's mental ear. The significance of this answer is betokened by the terms in which it is introduced: it is to be written, viz. on tablets, in order that all may read it easily, and also because it will only be fully verified in the future, when the tablets will be evidence that the prophet has spoken it (cf. Is. xxx. 8).

tables: as in Luke i. 63 AV., an archaism for tablets; cf. Is. viii. 1, xxx. 8. Make it plain, as Dt. xxvii. 8.

that he may run, &c. That he who readeth it may run, —viz. in his reading, i. e. may read it fluently, without being hindered by any indistinctness in the writing.

3. For the vision is still for the appointed time: it still relates to the time appointed by God for its fulfilment; there is an end, or goal, towards which it still presseth, and which, though it may be far distant, and the time of waiting may seem long, it still will not fail to reach.

hasteth. Or, presseth: lit., if the text be right (for the figure is rather a strange one), puffeth or panteth (Ps. xii. 5 RVm.); cf. the Lat. inhicare. The prophecy is, as it were, personified, and represented as pressing on eagerly to its accomplishment.

time, and it <sup>a</sup> hasteth toward the end, and shall not lie : though it tarry, wait for it ; because it will surely come, it <sup>4</sup> will not delay. Behold, his soul is puffed up, it is not <sup>b</sup> upright in him : but the just shall live <sup>c</sup> by his faith.

will not lie : i. e. will not deceive, or disappoint, those who trust in it, will not fail. Cf. (of waters) Is. lviii. 11 (EVV. 'fail').

delay. Or, be late : lit. 'be behind,' arrive after its appointed time (2 S. xx. 5).

4. The contents of the 'vision.' Behold, his soul is puffed up, it is not even in him ; but the just (or, the righteous) will live by his faithfulness. The pronoun his refers to the Chaldaean, so that the meaning is : The soul of the Chaldaean is elated with pride ; but the righteous will live by his faithfulness. The words express a moral distinction ; and the distinction carries with it the different destinies of the Chaldaean and of the righteous ; destruction (it is implied) for the one, and life for the other. But the distinction is one which may not be verified at once ; the destruction of the Chaldaean may be deferred for many years ; hence the stress laid in v. 3 on the need of patience.

even. Or smooth, plain (cf. Pr. xi. 5 RVm. ; Is. xl. 3 RVm.), also (RVm.) straight (Ez. i. 7), and so (in a moral sense) upright : the antithesis of 'swollen' or 'puffed up' (assuming this word to be correct<sup>1</sup>) is an indication that the physical idea of the word is predominant, though the other, doubtless, is also present as well.

faithfulness. Not 'faith,'—for which (Davidson) 'Heb. has no word.' אֱמוּנָה means primarily steadiness, firmness, in a physical sense (Ex. xvii. 12, of the hands of Moses) : then, as a moral quality, steadfastness, trustworthiness, faithfulness ; see especially 2 K. xii. 15 [Heb. 16], xxii. 7, 'dealing in faithfulness' (in handling money), where we might say 'honestly' ; often parallel with 'righteousness,' 1 S. xxvi. 23 ; Is. xi. 5 ; Jer. v. 1 RVm. ; Is. lix. 4

<sup>1</sup> The pron. 'his' has no antecedent : and there is force in the remark (We., Dav.) that we want a substantive to which this pron. may refer : עָלָיו for עָלֶיהָ has been suggested—'Behold, as for the unrighteous, his soul is not even (or upright) within him.' The predicate, 'is not even (or upright),' is, however, in this case rather weak. But clause a balances clause b so imperfectly that even on this ground it may well be doubted whether its text is sound.

(EVV. 'truth'). The righteous man—i. e. here the righteous Israelite—who is faithful in all the relations of life, and is sincere and upright in heart and purpose, has in his character a principle of permanence which cannot be shaken, and which, whatever external troubles may assail him, should be to him a source of moral strength and security. See further on this verse, and also on the quotations of it in the N. T., above, pp. 62-64<sup>1</sup>.

5-20. A series of woes, each denouncing some characteristic sin of the Chaldaean, and threatening him, expressly or by implication, with condign retribution for it. As the text stands, there follow, after the introductory words (vv. 5, 6<sup>a</sup>), five paragraphs, each introduced by Ah! (cf. Is. v. 8-24), and each purporting to be spoken (v. 6) by the nations whom the Chaldaean has victimized. As the prophet proceeds, however, he seems to forget v. 6, and to speak in his own person; and if (see the next note) v. 5 began originally with Ah! the words spoken by the nations may be confined to vv. 6<sup>b</sup>-8.

5. The first 'woe,' directed against the ambition of the Chaldaeans and their insatiable lust of conquest.

Yea, moreover, wine, &c. No intelligible sense can be extracted from these and the following words: 'wine' is out of place here, the context relating entirely to the ambitious doings of the Chaldaeans; and the rendering 'keepeth at home' is more than doubtful. No entirely satisfactory emendation has been suggested: the best is to read ah! for הִין 'wine,' though this leaves וְאֵף כִּי 'yea, moreover,' as an unexplained residuum, which nevertheless must be disregarded: we shall then get, Ah! the treacherous (or ruthless) dealer (i. e. the Chaldaean, as i. 13), the haughty (Prov. xxi. 24) man, that resteth not (יָנוּחַ for יָנוּחַ)—the words thus referring to the restless ambition of the Chaldaeans.

the Underworld: he is as insatiate as the grave, or as Death (which is here personified). Cf. Is. v. 14 'Therefore Sheol hath enlarged her desire, and opened her mouth without measure'; Prov. xxvii. 20 'Sheol and Abaddon are never satisfied,' xxx. 15 f. 'Desire' is lit. soul—the 'soul' in the psychology of the Hebrews being regarded as the seat of desire and appetite: cf. Ex. xv. 9 'My soul shall be filled with them'; Is. lvi. 11 'greedy,' lit. 'strong of soul' (see more fully the writer's Parallel Psalter, p. 459 f.).

but gathereth, &c. Sweeps all nations into his net.

6<sup>a</sup>. a parable. Rather, a taunt-song. To define the exact meaning of māshāl in some of its usages is very difficult: see Dr. Gray's Comment. on Numbers, pp. xiii—xiv, 299 f., 344 f. It means properly a likeness or representation; it thus (besides its usual sense of proverb) denotes sometimes (Ez. xvii. 2, xxiv. 3) a parable or allegory, i. e. a representation symbolizing, in indirect or figurative language, something else, and sometimes (as Nu. xxiii. 7, 18; Job xxvii. 1, xxix. 1) an elevated and declaratory poetical discourse. Here, Is. xiv. 4, and Mic. ii. 4, it is used of a lamentation over the fall of a nation or its ruler. 'Parable' in these passages suggests a wholly incorrect idea; and the best rendering is probably taunt-song (cf. Is. xiv. 4 AVm. 'taunting speech').

and a figure (Prov. i. 6), even riddles, in regard to him. Synonyms for a 'taunt-song,' derived from the fact that its meaning was often concealed under allusive, enigmatic figures or expressions.

6<sup>b</sup>-8. The taunt-song. The nations tax the Chaldeans with the spoliation and bloodshed with which their conquests had been effected, and for which, they declare, a just retribution will be inflicted on them.

Ah! (Nah. iii. 1) he that increaseth that which is not his (by plundering other nations). There is probably, as in v. 7, an allusion to the custom of taking interest, which was viewed with disfavour by the Jews, and stigmatized by them as unjust: the verb rendered 'increaseth' being cognate to one of the Hebrew words for 'interest' (Prov. xxviii. 8; Lev. xxv. 36: EVV. 'increase').

ladeth himself with pledges. The Chaldaean is compared to a merciless usurer (Dt. xxiv. 10), who compels the nations to give him heavy pledges : but the day will come when these pledges will have to be repaid.

7. The retribution. There is a play here on the double sense of the word nāshak, which means both to bite (Gen. xlix. 17), and also (metaphorically) to bite off from the principal lent, i. e. to give interest : the ptp. nōshek means accordingly a giver of interest or a debtor, and the subst. neshek, lit. a biting off, means interest (EVV. usury). The Chaldaean is represented as a creditor who exacts heavy interest : the victimized nations are thus nōshekim, 'debtors', but also 'biters,' who, when their day comes, will punish him remorselessly for his exactions.

that shall vex thee. 'Vex' was in Old English a stronger word than it is now, and corresponded more closely to the Lat. vexare, to drag to and fro ; it is now inadequate as a rendering of the Heb. word here used. Render that shall shake thee (cf. RVm.), viz. to make thee disgorge thy plunder, or disturb thee from thy ill-gained possessions.

8. The lex talionis will be put in force against the Chaldaeans : cf. Is. xiv. 2<sup>b</sup>, xxxiii. 1.

the remnant of the peoples : i. e. those who have escaped destruction, whether among (Jos. xxiii. 12), or outside of, the 'many' nations despoiled by the Chaldaeans.

because of men's blood, &c. Because of the violence done to humanity. 'City' is to be understood collectively, of the cities which the Chaldaeans had ravaged or burnt. Cf. the description of Babylon as the 'hammer of the whole earth,' Jer. l. 23, also li. 7, 25, Is. xiv. 6.

<sup>1</sup> Not, as RVm., they that exact usury of thee, which would be expressed by the Hiphil conj. (Dt. xxiii. 20), not by the Kal.

- 9 Woe to him that getteth an evil gain for his house, that he may set his nest on high, that he may be delivered 10 from the hand of evil! Thou hast consulted shame to thy house, by cutting off many peoples, and hast sinned

9-11. The second 'woe.' The rapacity and violence by which their empire had been established.

Ah! he that getteth an evil gain for his house: i. e. for his dynasty; the 'evil gain' thus obtained by the Chaldaean being, as the following words signify, employed by him in fortifying and securing his abode.

set his nest on high, &c.: i. e. secure himself against calamity, the figure being derived from the custom of certain birds, especially (Tristram, NHB. 175) the 'eagle' or Griffon-vulture (see on i. 8), of building their nests amid inaccessible rocks, along the steep sides of gorges and defiles, which can be reached only by the most intrepid climbers. Cf., for the figure, Nu. xxiv. 21; Ob. 4 = Jer. xlix. 16.

10. Thou hast purposed shame to thy house. An oxymoron: the Chaldaean of course planned in reality the safety of his own house, but his plan resulted in its confusion and disgrace. Cf. Hos. iv. 18 'her rulers love ignominy,' i. e. love the course of action which leads to it; and the similar cases in which the result of a course of action is described ironically as its purpose, Hos. viii. 4; Is. xxx. 1; Jer. vii. 18, 19 (Lex. p. 775<sup>b</sup>). 'Consult' in RV. is used here as in Mic. vi. 5, in the sense, now obsolete, of purposing or devising: see Murray, Engl. Dict., who cites from Ussher (1658), 'Vologeses was supposed to have consulted the invading of Armenia.'

and hast sinned, &c. Render: forfeiting thine own life. Hātā is used here in its primary sense of missing (Jud. xx. 16, in the caus. conj., 'let (the stone) miss'), Job v. 24 RV., Prov. viii. 36 RVm., xix. 2 RVm., and especially xx. 2 'he that angereth himself against a king is on the way to forfeit his own life.' In using violence towards the nations the Chaldaean was so acting as ultimately to bring ruin upon himself.

against thy soul. For the stone shall cry out of the wall, 11 and the beam out of the timber shall answer it.

Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood, and 12
stablisheth a city by iniquity! Behold, is it not of the 13 LORD of hosts that the peoples labour for the fire, and the nations weary themselves for vanity? For the earth 14 shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea.

Woe unto him that giveth his neighbour drink, that 15

11. The very stones and wood of which his houses and palaces are built will bear witness to the robbery and injustice by which they were procured.

12-14. The third 'woe.' The cruelty and oppression which had given them the means of building and beautifying their cities. The allusion may be either to the plunder and bloodshed by which the Chaldaean enriched his coffers, or to the forced labour of conquered subjects, by which, with disregard to the lives lost in the process, public works and buildings are constructed in Eastern despotisms.

12. Ah! he that buildeth, &c. Cf. Mic. iii. 10 'Building up Zion with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity' (viz. by forced labour, wealth gained by oppression and judicial murders, &c.: cf. Jer. xxii. 13, 17, of Jehoiakim).

13. But the nations, such is Yahweh's decree, toil only to satisfy the fire—for fire will destroy the cities they have built; and they weary themselves only for vanity (lit. 'emptiness'), for their empires will fall into ruins. Cf. the citation in Jer. li. 58<sup>b</sup>.

of: i.e. from (as often in Old English; cf. Ps. xxii. 25 PBV.): the Heb. exactly as 1 K. xii. 24 (EVV. 'the thing is of (= from) me'); Ps. xxii. 25, cxviii. 23, &c.

14. Reason for vv. 12, 13. The civilizations of heathendom will perish; for something better will take their place: the earth will be filled with the knowledge of Yahweh's glory (as manifested, viz. in their overthrow: see, for this sense of 'glory,' Is. lxvi. 18, 19; and cf. Ez. xxviii. 22, xxxix. 13, 21), and its inhabitants will no longer care to toil for the fire. The verse is based upon Is. xi. 9<sup>b</sup> (which closes the description of the blissful reign of the ideal king), but differs from it both in wording (especially in the addition of 'the glory of') and in application.

15. Ah! he that giveth his neighbour drink, &c. Drunken-

 16 also, that thou mayest look on their nakedness! Thou art filled with shame for glory: drink thou also, and

ness is here a figure of the prostration and helplessness of a conquered people, powerless under the stupefying or paralysing effects of a great catastrophe: cf. Nah. iii. 11 and the passages there quoted.

addest: RVm. pourest. Both renderings are uncertain. The verb used occurs in the sense of 'attach' or 'join,' 1 S. ii. 36, xxvi. 19, Is. xiv. 1, and (probably) Job xxx. 7, though this is not quite the same as that of adding something to a liquid; and the sense 'pour' is supported by the Arabic, and by the derivative 'overflowings' in Job xiv. 19. But see the next note.

venom: RVm. fury. The word (hēmāh) signifies properly heat; hence it means fig. (a) fury, Nah. i. 6, and often, (b) poison or venom, Dt. xxxii. 24, 33. If the text is sound, the meaning will thus be that the wine is, as it were, heated, or strengthened, by the fury (or venom) of the nations being mingled with it so as to make it more efficacious in producing drunkenness. But the text (see the last note) is suspicious; and the clever emendation of Grätz and Wellh., which involves extremely slight change in the text, may safely be accepted: 'Ah! he that giveth his neighbour drink from the bowl (Zech. xii. 2) of his fury, and maketh him drunken also!'

in order to look, &c. That he may gloat over the spectacle of his exposure (Gen. ix. 21), fig. for the humiliation and disgrace accompanying his 'drunkenness.' Cf. Lam. iv. 21<sup>b</sup>; Nah. iii. 5<sup>h</sup>.

16. But in doing this the Chaldaean has only prepared humiliation and disgrace for himself.

Thou art sated with ignominy rather than (= and not with) glory. The 'prophetic' past, describing the future as already accomplished: the Chaldaean will be sated (an oxymoron) not with glory but with ignominy. The same two words are opposed in Hos. iv. 7 'Their glory I will exchange for ignominy.'

drink thou also. How this effect will be produced: it will now be the Chaldaean's turn to drink; for the stupefying draught which he has given the nations of the earth to drink (cf. Jer. li. 7) will soon be given by Yahweh to himself (cf. Jer. xxv. 26 end).

and be uncircumcised (without 'as one'). More exactly, if the text is correct, get thee a foreskin, i. e. become an object of hand shall be turned unto thee, and foul shame shall be upon thy glory. For the violence done to Lebanon<sup>17</sup> shall cover thee, and the destruction of the beasts,<sup>a</sup> which made them afraid; because of men's blood, mockery. But the figure is both very harsh and also foreign to the context; so that Wellh. is almost certainly right in transposing two letters and reading with LXX (σαλεύθητι: see Zech. xii. 2) and stagger<sup>1</sup>, which forms a good sequel to 'drink'; see Is. li. 17, 22 ('the cup of staggering'); and cf. Jer. xxv. 15, 16.

the cup of Yahweh's right hand. The cup of His wrath (Jer. xxv. 15, 17, 28), which intoxicates, and renders helpless, those who drink it: fig. of a great and overwhelming disaster. Cf. Is. li. 17, 22, just cited; Jer. xxv. 16, 27; Ez. xxiii. 31-33; and especially Lam. iv. 21.

be turned. Better, come round: cf. for the thought Jer. xxv. 15; Lam. iv. 21. 'Be turned' is, however, no doubt meant here in the now obsolete neuter sense of turn round: see in AV. Rev. i. 12<sup>b</sup>, compared with i. 12<sup>a</sup> (Parallel Psalter, p. 483).

17. The reason why this doom will fall upon the Chaldaean: the violence wrought by him in the world will recoil upon his head.

the violence done to Lebanon. 'Lebanon' might be intended to typify the land of Israel generally (cf. Is. xxxiii. 9; Jer. xxii. 20, 23); but more probably it is meant literally: the inscriptions of the Assyrian kings abound with accounts of the amount of timber cut down in the forests of Amanus or Lebanon<sup>2</sup> for building temples and palaces in their capitals, and also of their great hunting exploits in the same regions; and the Chaldaeans acted in these respects like their predecessors (see especially Is. xiv. 8).

and the destruction of the beasts shall dismay thee. So we must read, with the ancient versions and RVm.; the textual change is exceedingly slight (יחית for יחית).

because of men's blood, &c. The same words as in v. 8, repeated as a kind of refrain. They must not be understood as explanatory of the two preceding clauses, but as parallel to them, only the form of expression being changed: the shame described in v. 16 will overtake the Chaldaean both because of the violence and for the violence done to the land, to the city and to all that dwell therein.

- 18 What profiteth the graven image, that the maker thereof hath graven it; the molten image, and the teacher of lies, that the maker of <sup>a</sup>his work trusteth therein, to make

done to Lebanon and the beasts, and also because of that done to human beings.

18-20. The fifth 'woe.' Their irrational and bootless idolatry. On the analogy of the other 'woes' v. 19 should precede v. 18; and this order would improve the sequence of thought, v. 19, stating the sin generally, being followed (as in the other cases) by a reference to its effects, viz. the inability of the idol to help or deliver its owner. Even, however, with this transposition some more direct application of what is said to the case of the Chaldaeans is desiderated, and possibly a verse to this effect has fallen out.

18 (the sequel, really, of v. 19). The uselessness of idols in the hour of need. For the thought that idols, or false gods, do not 'profit,' cf. 1 S. xii. 21; Jer. ii. 8, 11, xvi. 19; Is. xlv. 9, 10, lvii. 12; and the satire upon idol-makers, Is. xli. 6-7, xlv. 9-20, xlv. 6-7; Jer. x. 2-9; on the idols of the Chaldaeans, also, Is. xxi. 9; Jer. l. 38.

the teacher of lies. I. e. the idol itself, which 'teaches' through its priests, and so sustains the delusion that it is a god. The word 'teach' (or 'direct') is the one used technically of 'direction' given by a priest in the name of his god: see on Hag. ii. 11; and cf. in Gen. xii. 6 the 'directing terebinth,' of an oracular tree.

the maker of his work. More exactly, he that formed his framed thing (Is. xxix. 16), i. e. his idol, or he that formed its (RVm.) frame (Ps. ciii. 14), gave it (the idol) its particular size and contour (AVm. fashion). The verb (with which in the Heb. the subst. is cognate) means properly to mould as a potter; but it is often used in various fig. applications. Of idols, as here, Is. xlv. 9, 10, 12, and above in the present verse ('maker').

dumb idols. LXX, εἰδωλα κωφά; cf. 1 Cor. xii. 2 εἰδωλα ἄφωνα. The word rendered 'idols' (אֱלִילִים) suggests the idea of what is unsubstantial and worthless (Job xiii. 4 'worthless physicians,' Jer. xiv. 14 'a thing of nought'); cf. Is. ii. 8, 18, 20.

19. Awake! . . . Arise! viz. to help me: the words addressed

Behold, it is laid over with gold and silver, and there is no breath at all in the midst of it. [A?] But the LORD is in his holy temple: <sup>a</sup>let all the earth keep silence before him.

[A] A prayer of Habakkuk the prophet, set to Shig-

elsewhere to Yahweh, Ps. xxxv. 23, xlv. 23. Cf. similar irony in Dt. xxxii. 37f.; Jer. ii. 28; Is. xlvi. 7.

Shall this teach? Or, direct? i.e. give answers, when consulted, as to what is to be done. An exclamation of contempt at the infatuation of those who would resort to such an object for guidance.

there is no breath, &c. Cf. Jer. x. 14; Ps. cxxxv. 17; also Dt. iv. 28; Ps. cxv. 6. See developments of the thought of these two verses in Is. xlv. 9-20, and the prophecy inserted in Jeremiah's book which now stands as Jer. x. 1-16.

20. The prophet's thought now passes by contrast (cf. Jer. x. 10) from the dumb and helpless idol to Yahweh, the living God: He is in His heavenly Temple, where He sits enthroned as Governor of the world, watching the deeds of men, and ready, if need be, to interpose and punish them (Ps. xi. 4, 6).

be silent before him. In the Heb. an exclamation, hush! or be still! so Zeph. i. 7; Zech. ii. 13 (Heb. 17). The expression is perhaps (but not certainly) intended to form the transition to ch. iii.

iii. This chapter consists of a lyric ode, in which the poet, with great brilliancy and poetical power, develops the thought of Yahweh's coming to judgement, and executing vengeance on His people's foes. The 'prayer' (as it is called in the title) is limited to v. 2; and is to the effect that Yahweh will 'revive' His work 'in the midst of years,' i.e. renew or repeat, in the midst of the years that have passed since the Exodus, the great 'work' (Ps. xlv. 1) of deliverance wrought by Him of old. As an answer to this prayer the prophet pictures a theophany, in which Yahweh appears to judge and to redeem. The theophany is described in language and imagery suggested by the Exodus and by the terms of Dt. xxxiii. 2, Jud. v. 4, 5. The scene is laid in the desert region on the S. of Judah: a great thunderstorm comes up from the mountains of Edom and Paran; it bursts over the wilderness; neighbouring peoples are in dismay; and the oppressors of Israel are scattered before it. In the description past

O LORD, revive thy work in the midst of the years,
In the midst of the years make it known ;

tenses predominate (see in the Heb. vv. 3<sup>b</sup>, 6, 8<sup>a</sup>, 10, &c.), the future, in accordance with a frequent usage of the prophets (see e.g. Is. ix. 2 ff., xxxiii. 3), being vividly imagined as past, and described accordingly. In English we should more naturally in such a case use presents (cf. RVm. on v. 3). For other descriptions of a coming deliverance, painted in colours suggested by the Exodus, see Is. xi. 15, 16, xliii. 16, 17, xlviii. 21, lii. 12. On the question of the authorship of the ode, see above, pp. 59 f.

1. The title resembles those in the Psalms, e.g. Ps. xc.

set to Shigyōnōth. Shigyōnōth would be the plural of Shiggāyōn, which appears in the title of Ps. vii, 'Shiggāyōn of David.' The meaning, like that of most of the other musical terms occurring in the titles of the Psalms, is obscure; the verb shāgāh means to go astray or wander (Ez. xxxiv. 6; through wine, Is. xxviii. 7 [thrice]; and morally, to err, 1 S. xxvi. 21 al.); hence it has been supposed that Shiggāyōn may denote a dithyrambic poem, written in wandering irregular rhythms, and 'set to Shigyōnōth,' one sung to music of a similar character: but this explanation has only the value of a conjecture.

2. I have heard. The prophet speaks most probably in the name of the community, as he does clearly in v. 14: cf. similarly Is. lxi. 10 f.; Jer. v. 19 f., x. 19 f., 24; Mic. vii. 7-10, &c. (LOT., p. 390).

the report of thee, and am afraid. The prophet had 'heard the report' (Dt. ii. 25), or 'fame' (Nu. xiv. 15; Is. lxvi. 19; 1 K. x. 1), of what Yahweh had done at the Exodus; and, realizing it vividly, was 'afraid' (cf. Ex. xiv. 31): when God appears in judgement, even though His judgement alights only on His foes, all who witness it will naturally be filled with awe and dread.

revive thy work, &c. The prophet looks back to the great 'work' of the Exodus, and forward into the indefinite future; and, fearful lest Yahweh may still defer His redemption, prays that, 'in the midst' of this long period 'of years,' He will interpose quickly on His people's behalf.

make (it) known. Wellh., Now., Marti, adopt the reading which underlay the rendering of LXX, make thyself known (cf. Ps. ix. 16, xlviii. 3; Ez. xx. 9, xxxviii. 23)<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> LXX for most of the last clause and for this have the curious and in part double and even treble rendering, 'In the midst of two

In wrath remember mercy.

In wrath remember mercy. Yahweh's wrath with Israel might lead Him to defer His interference, and allow the time of trial and waiting to be protracted: he prays, therefore, that this may be shortened, and that in His anger with Israel He will remember mercy. Others understand the 'wrath' of that which the Judge will manifest when He appears in judgement, and which the prophet prays may not alight upon Israel; but the form in which the clause is expressed suggests that it does not introduce a contrast to, or qualification of, the two preceding clauses, but is rather parallel to them.

3-7. The theophany. The poet describes a great storm, advancing from the south, the region of Paran and Sinai: in the dark thunder-clouds he conceives Yahweh to be concealed; the lightning-flashes which illumine heaven and earth disclose glimpses of the dazzling brightness immediately about Him; the earth quakes, the hills sink, and neighbouring desert-tribes look on in dismay. The Hebrews habitually pictured Yahweh as borne along in the thunder-cloud (see Ps. xviii. 7, and cf. on Nah. i. 3<sup>b</sup>, 5): the usual word for 'thunder' in Heb. is voices (viz. of Yahweh), e. g. Ex. ix. 23 (Heb.), 28 (cf. R.Vm.); 1 S. xii. 17; and cf. Ps. xxix. 3-9. For illustrations, from an actual storm in the same region, of many traits in the poet's imagery, see pp. 99 f.

from Teman. A district in the N. or NW. of Edom (Ez. xxv. 13; Am. i. 12 al.). Cf. Dt. xxxiii. 2, Jud. v. 4, where Yahweh is represented similarly as coming to the help of His people from Edom.

animals [a misreading or confusion of the Heb. words rendered rightly, 'In the midst of years revive it'] thou shalt be known, when the years draw nigh thou shalt be recognized, when the time approaches thou shalt be declared.' These words were supposed by the Fathers to be a prediction of the birth of Christ; and the first clause has had considerable influence upon Christian art; for it is the origin of the pictorial representations of the Infant Saviour, lying in the stable at Bethlehem between an ox and an ass (these two animals being suggested by Is. i. 3, which was interpreted mystically of Christ). See on this subject an article by A. West, in the Contemp. Review, Dec. 1903, pp. 873 ff., according to whom (p. 879) this interpretation of the LXX rendering of Hab. iii. 2<sup>b</sup> is first found at the end of the fifth century in the Gospel of Pseudo-Matthew (translated into Latin by Jerome): see also ibid. p. 881 on other patristic exegesis of the same rendering.

the Holy One. Who cannot endure wickedness (i. 13), and who will judge the world, and destroy the wicked oppressor out of it (iii. 12-14). Cf. the same title (also used absolutely) in Is. xl. 25: usually it is the 'Holy One of Israel' (cf. on i. 12).

His glory. Rather, His majesty, as of a King, Ps. xxi. 5<sup>b</sup>, civ. 1<sup>c</sup> (in each render 'majesty and state'): here with reference to the splendour of the lightnings, which seemed to cover the whole heavens (cf. p. 100). Not the word used in Ps. xix. 1.

his praise. Not the praise addressed to Him by men, but that in God which evokes men's praise, His splendour or glory. Cf. similar uses of 'praise' in Is. lx. 18, lxii. 7; Jer. xlviii. 2, li. 41.

4. And his brightness was as the light, the full light of the sun (Job xxxi. 26 RVm.). The rendering implies two slight changes in the text (נגה for נדה; and יהיה for יהיה); but this, or something similar, must, it seems, be adopted.

He had rays (lit. horns: see Ex. xxxiv. 29 RVm.) coming forth at his side (i. e. at either side), alluding to the flashes of lightning accompanying the storm. Cf. Dt. xxxiii. 2 'at his right hand was a burning fire<sup>1</sup> for them'; and Ps. xviii. 12, l. 3.

And there: viz. where the lightnings played; the lightnings forming, as it were, a veil concealing Yahweh's full 'power,' or Godhead.

5. Yahweh is figured as a king, making a victorious progress through his enemies' country: Pestilence and Fever are personified as His attendants, the one preceding Him as His armour-bearer (1 S. xvii. 7), or courier (2 S. xv. 1), the other following behind the pestilence. Lev. xxvi. 25 ; Ps. xci. 3, 6 al.

And fiery darts went forth at his feet (i. e. as He went along). Resheph is a pointed, darting flame (Cant. viii. 6 ; Ps. lxxvi. 3 RVm. ; lxxviii. 48 poet. for lightnings), here, as in Dt. xxxii. 24, used poetically of the fiery darts, sent by Yahweh, to which either the poet, or popular imagination, attributed fever, or other pestilential complaint. Reshef or Reshûf seems to have been the name of the Fire- or Lightning-god in Phœnician <sup>1</sup>.

6. The storm now descends from heaven, and approaches the earth, and its effects, as it bursts close upon it, are described: the ground rocks, mountains are cleft, and human beings start back in terror. The description may be merely that of the storm (cf. p. 100) ; or the theophany may be pictured as accompanied by an earthquake.

measured. The meaning has been supposed to be, measured with the eyes, i. e. surveyed ; but this is very improbable. We may read, either with RVm. shook (for this implies a slight change in the text<sup>2</sup>), or with Wellh. made the earth to melt<sup>3</sup> (cf. Nah. i. 5, and especially Am. ix. 5). For similar effects represented as produced by Yahweh's touching or marching over the earth, cf. Am. ix. 5 ; Mic. i. 3, 4 ; Nah. i. 5.

He looked, and made the nations start (or, leap) ; the Judge's look made them quail with terror. Not drove asunder: see Lev. xi. 21 ('to leap'), Job xxxvii. 1<sup>b</sup> (read 'starteth' for the colourless 'is moved').

primaeval, the point being that mountains which had been fixed immovably for long centuries now gave way : see the same two expressions in parallelism in Gen. xlix. 26 RVm.; cf. Dt. xxxiii. 15 (in the Heb. a different word for ancient).

His goings were as of old (the word rendered everlasting in the preceding clause). His progress (Ps. lxxviii. 24), as the poet pictured it, was as it had been of old, when He came forth at the Exodus for the deliverance of His people. The marg. (= AV.) is not probable.

7. As of yore, at the Exodus (Ex. xv. 14-16), neighbouring tribes quaked with terror.

curtains. I. e. tent-hangings; in parallelism with 'tents,' as Is. liv. 2; Jer. iv. 20, x. 20, xlix. 29.

the land of Midian. Properly the country on the E. side of the Gulf of Akabah; but Midianites were also settled in the Sinaitic Peninsula (Ex. iii. 1, xviii. 1), and apparently (1 K. xi. 18) between Edom and Paran. Named as one of the peoples who would be among the first to be alarmed, as Yahweh came forth from 'Teman' and 'Paran' (v. 3).

8-15. The motive of the theophany. 'Was Yahweh angry,' the poet asks, 'with seas or rivers, that He thus came forth riding through the heavens?' and again he depicts, in splendid imagery, the course of the storm (vv. 9-11). Vv. 13-15 give the answer to the poet's question: it was to save His people, and annihilate those who sought to destroy it.

8. against the rivers (first time). Read probably, with Grätz, merely dropping one letter, against the mountains: this both relieves the tautology, and is suited to the context (v. 6).

of salvation. Better, of deliverance or victory: the Heb. word—which, as Arabic shows, means properly breadth, spaciousness, freedom—having the same sense of a material deliverance

Thy bow was made quite bare;

Thou didst cleave the earth with rivers.

which it has in Ex. xiv. 13. 1 Sam xiv. 45, Ps. iiii. 8, and elsewhere (cf. the writer's Parallel Psalter, pp. 435 f.).

The 'horses' and 'chariots' are here the storm-clouds, upon which Yahweh is elsewhere also pictured as 'riding,' Is. xix. 1; Ps. xviii. 10, civ. 3: cf. Dt. xxxiii. 26; Ps. lxviii. 33.

9. Thy bow was made quite bare: i.e. taken out of its covering for use. The arrows (v. 11) which the poet pictures it as discharging will be here the lightnings or thunder-bolts which strike the earth in the storm.

The oaths to the tribes, &c. The text of this clause must be corrupt: not only are the renderings of both RV. and RVM. very questionable, but any mention of the tribes is altogether out of place: it is only the storm which is here described, and a reference to the deliverance of the people follows only in vv. 12-14. What is really wanted here is some description of the discharge of arrows from the bow. No certain emendation can be proposed. Marti, supposing 'thy quiver' to have been lost at the beginning of the verse, conjectures (partly on the basis of a group of LXX MSS.), Thou didst wholly empty thy quiver, thy bow was satiate (for the figure, cf. Jer. xlvi. 10) with shafts [the word rendered in the marg. 'rods'].

Thou didst cleave the earth into rivers. The rush of waters, pouring down the mountain-sides, dug out channels in the earth, and filled the dry wādys with torrents. See p. 100.

10. The continued description of the storm: torrents of rain pour down; the waves of the deep roar aloud, and mount high, as though in amazement. Of vv. 10, 11 there are evident reminiscences in Ps. lxxvi. 16-17 (of the storm accompanying the passage of the Red Sea).

were afraid. Better, were in pangs—the word is commonly used of the pangs of childbirth: in the thunder and earthquake the mountains seemed to quiver and be in throes. Cf. Ps. lxxvii. 16<sup>a</sup>—'The waters saw thee, O God, the waters saw thee, they were in pangs.'

The tempest of waters passed by. Rather, passed on, advanced. In the Hebrew, however, the words differ only by two

- The deep uttered his voice,
And lifted up his hands on high.
- 11 The sun and moon stood still in their habitation;
At the light of thine arrows as they went,
At the shining of thy glittering spear.
- 12 Thou didst march through the land in indignation, Thou didst thresh the nations in anger.

uttered its voice: i. e. roared (Ps. xciii. 3). Cf. Ps. lxxvii. 17<sup>b</sup> 'the skies uttered their voice.' The 'deep' may be the neighbouring sea (v. 15); or (p. 100) the roaring torrent produced by the storm in a mountain wady (cf. Ps. xlii. 7).

(And) lifted up its hands on high. Poet. for, its waves mounted high, the 'deep' being personified. But Wellh., Now., Marti are probably right in regarding the clause as corrupt, and as forming properly the beginning of v. 11, the first two lines of which would then read somewhat as follows (the exact words of which line 1 is a corruption are uncertain):—

The moon stood still in its habitation (חִבְּתָהּ).

Observe that in v. 11 there is no 'and' in the Heb. before 'the moon,' and the verb 'stood' is singular. Cf. I.XX (Codd. 23, 62, 86, 147), φῶς τὸ λαμπρὸν τοῦ ἡλίου ἐπέσχευ' τὸ δὲ φέγγος τῆς σελήνης ἐστάθη.

11. Sun and moon are in retirement, hidden by the dark thunder-clouds, and eclipsed by the brilliant play of the lightnings.

stood still in (their) habitation. Did not come forth, remained hidden in the abode in which, as the Hebrews imagined, they regularly passed the night. Cf. the 'tent' of Ps. xix. 4.

At the light of thine arrows as they went abroad, &c. Fig. for the lightnings (Ps. xviii. 14, lxxvii. 17), which lit up the heavens, and made the sun and moon, so to say, afraid to show themselves. Cf. Ps. lxxvii. 17<sup>c</sup> 'yea, thine arrows went abroad.'

12-15. Hitherto the poet has described the effects of Yahweh's appearance upon nature: he now proceeds to describe how it would result further in the deliverance of Israel, and in a judgement upon Israel's foes.

12. In indignation thou didst march along the earth, In anger thou didst thresh (or, trample down) the nations. The motive by which Yahweh was actuated is placed first for emphasis. March, as Jud. v. 4; Ps. lxviii. 7. Thresh: the word means properly to tread or trample (Dt. xxv. 4 'when he treadeth out the corn<sup>1</sup>); for threshing was (and is still) often performed in the East by animals, usually oxen (Dt. loc. cit.), which were driven round the threshing-floor till their hoofs trampled out the grain<sup>1</sup>. For the same fig. use of the word, see Mic. iv. 13, Is. xli. 15; cf. 2 K. xlii. 7.

13-14. The object of the theophany is here at last stated explicitly. Margins a, d, on this verse, and a on vv. 14, 15, are intended to throw the description into the present, in conformity with the first margin on v. 3.

thine anointed<sup>2</sup>. Either the king—i. e. the Davidic king in the abstract, not necessarily Jehoiakim—or, as others (Hitz., Ew., We., Dav.) prefer (agreeably with the parallelism with line 1), the people, who, at least in later times, are sometimes regarded as inheriting the position and dignity of David. The word has been supposed to have the same sense in Ps. xxviii. 8, lxxxiv. 9, lxxxix. 38, 51; cf. cv. 15 (where it is applied, in the plural, to the patriarchs).

Thou didst shatter the head off the house, &c. Māḥaṣ is to crush or wound severely by a heavy blow,—on the head, as here, Jud. v. 26, Ps. lxviii. 21 ('smite through'), cx. 6 ('strike through'): seeing that 'from' follows, RVm. 'smite off' is hardly too strong. 'The foe is compared to a house, the top of which is smitten away from it, so that it falls to pieces, and the foundation is laid bare' (Dav.).

Laying bare the foundation: viz. by destroying the house so completely that the foundations appear (Mic. i. 6); cf. Ps. cxxxvii. 7 'Lay it bare, lay it bare, even to the foundation in it.' Even unto the neck seems to mean, up to the top of the walls, after their 'head,' or roof, had been knocked away. Several moderns,

his <sup>b</sup> warriors :

They came as a whirlwind to scatter me :

Their rejoicing was as to devour the poor secretly.

however, omitting a letter, read 'even unto the rock,'—i.e. the rock upon which the foundation rested.

14. And so the foes who sought to ruin Israel are destroyed themselves.

with his own staves. If the text is correct, the meaning will be that the enemy were thrown into a panic, and turned their weapons against themselves (cf. Zech. xiv. 13). But, as Dav. remarks, there is nothing in the context to suggest such an idea; and probably we should, with Ew. and others, as well as Codd. 23, 62, 86, 147 of LXX, read thy staves. The word rendered staves often denotes a rod or staff, whether used as a support in walking (Ex. iv. 2, &c.), or for beating with (Is. ix. 4, xiv. 5); but only here, and (possibly) in v. 9, a warlike implement.

of his warriors. The word thus rendered is of unknown meaning; the rendering warriors (so Vulg.; cf. LXX, Pesh., rulers, leaders) being merely a conjecture suggested by the context. Words apparently allied mean open country (Zech. ii. 4; see the note), and dwellers in the open country, or peasantry (Dt. iii. 5 lit. 'cities of the peasantry'): hence RVm. hordes, as though the word denoted dwellers on steppes, such as the Scythians, who actually overran Western Asia about 630 B. C. (Hdt. i. 104-6), and who came, not as a regular, organized army, but as wild, undisciplined hordes. But the correctness of the text is open to suspicion, though no obvious emendation suggests itself.

came as a whirlwind. For the comparison cf. (though the Heb. word is different) Is. v. 28 (of the Assyrians), Jer. iv. 13 (of the Scythians).

to scatter me. Like chaff: Is. xli. 16; Jer. xiii. 24, xviii. 17. The first person refers to the people, in whose name the words are spoken: cf. on v. 2.

Their rejoicing, &c. The foe are compared to robbers, who exult as soon as they have the defenceless wayfarer in their grasp, and feel that they can plunder or murder him at their pleasure in some unfrequented corner (cf. the description in Ps. x. 8, 9).

to devour. Like a wild beast (Ps. xvii. 12): cf. Prov. xxx. 14; or, in so far as the nation is referred to, Jer. x. 25, xxx. 16, l. 7; Ps. xiv. 4 (the Heb. in all is eat, as here).

Thou <sup>a</sup> didst tread the sea with thine horses, 15

I heard, and my belly trembled, 16

God. 'Ani is properly humbled or afflicted; thus it comes to denote the 'poor' (Ex. xxii. 25 al.), describing him, not as a person in want, but as a person humbled or afflicted, especially by oppression, deprivation of rights, or other misfortune; then lastly the word acquired a moral and religious connotation, and came to denote the godly poor, the men who, while in various ways humbled and afflicted, were at the same time the godly servants of Yahweh: so, for instance, Is. xiv. 32, xxvi. 6, and often in the Psalms, as Ps. x. 2, 9, xii. 5. See further the writer's article 'Poor' in DB.; and cf. on Zeph. iii. 12.

secretly: more exactly, in a secret place. So Ps. x. 8 (RV. in the covert places), 9 (RV. in the covert), xvii. 12 (RV. in secret places), lxiv. 4 (RV. id.), Lam. iii. 10 (RV. id.).

15. Generally taken as a figurative description of the final ruin of the foe, the imagery being suggested by the passage of the Red Sea, when Yahweh, passing with Israel through the sea, overthrew the hosts of Pharaoh in the waters. The verse, however, says nothing about the destruction of any foe; the change of figure from v. 14<sup>a</sup> is violent; and there is probability in the suggestion that the verse has become displaced, and that it originally followed v. 7: standing there, it would describe how the storm of vv. 3-6 proceeded to agitate the waters of the sea, and it would give point to the question in v. 8, 'Was Yahweh's wrath against the sea?'

The surge (RVm.) of mighty waters. The reading of Codd. 23, 62, 86, 147 of LXX (ἐραπάχθη), adopted by Wellh., Now., the mighty waters surged or (PBV. of Ps. xlv. 3) swelled (חמר for חמר) has much to recommend it; the words will then describe the effect of Yahweh's 'treading' the sea with His 'horses' (fig. for the storm-clouds, as v. 8): the waters foamed and swelled<sup>1</sup>.

16-19. Conclusion. The poet closes by reverting to the thought of v. 2, 'and was afraid,' and describing the impression which the theophany made upon him: on the one hand, it filled him with agitation and alarm; on the other, it evoked within him a joyous <sup>1</sup> For heap (RV.) see Ex. viii. 14 [Heb. 10]. The word is externally the same as that for surge, but it is really different, the initial guttural, as Arabic shows, being not the same.

 Rottenness entered into my bones, and I trembled in confidence that, whatever happened, Yahweh would prove Himself His people's salvation.

quivered. The word used elsewhere of the ears 'tingling' (1 S. iii. 11; 2 K. xxi. 12; Jer. xix. 3); here of the lips striking together in fear.

voice: rather, sound, viz. of the roaring storm.

Rottenness entered into my bones: i. e. the bones, the framework of the poet's body, seemed to give way through fear; his strength utterly failed him. For the fig. cf. Prov. xii. 4, xiv. 30; cf. also the hyperbolical poetical descriptions of the effects of pain or suffering on the 'bones' in Ps. vi. 2, xxii. 14, xxxi. 10, xlii. 10; Is. xxxviii. 13; Lam. i. 13, iii. 4.

in my place: or, where I stood (lit. underneath myself—an idiomatic usage, 2 S. ii. 23, vii. 10; Is. xxv. 10 al.).

That I should rest, &c. This and the next line are most obscure and uncertain, the Heb. being in parts ambiguous, and the text open to suspicion. Assuming the text to be substantially correct, the best rendering is that of RV., with margin a, and with the one change (in punctuation only) of 'us' for 'him': that I should rest (waiting calmly) for the day of trouble (the day of judgement described in vv. 3-15, which, though it may end in Israel's deliverance, is nevertheless fraught with terror for those who witness it), when it cometh up against the people (i. e. if Habakkuk be the author, the Chaldeans) who troop (Gen. xlix. 19 'Gad, a troop shall troop upon him') upon us<sup>1</sup> (so substantially Nowack)<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>2</sup> Other renderings that have been proposed are—(1) That I must wait calmly for the day of trouble, for the coming up against the people (Israel) of him who will troop upon it (Del., Keil, Kirkp.:

For though the fig tree shall not blossom,
 Neither shall fruit be in the vines;
 The labour of the olive shall fail,
 And the fields shall yield no meat;
 The flock shall be cut off from the fold,
 And there shall be no herd in the stalls:

17. The tenses of the Heb. must here describe a series of facts, whether present actually, or pictured in imagination or vision as present; hence the 'though' (which is not in the Heb.) must be understood, not as introducing a merely hypothetical case (as e. g. in Am. ix. 2, 3), but as simply bringing out, for English ears, the antithesis to v. 18 (cf. Job viii. 7). The connexion with what precedes is, however, difficult. V. 16 describes the prophet's alarm at the manifestation of Yahweh for the overthrow of His people's foes: but how can the failure of the fig and other crops give a reason ('For') for this? V. 17 is commonly understood as a prophetic picture of the land of Judah desolated by the invaders (v. 16); but, as Now. and Dav. have remarked, the terms of the verse suggest more obviously a failure of crops due to natural causes. It must be allowed that Wellhausen may have seen rightly when he says that vv. 17-19 are not the genuine close of the poem: even Davidson observes, 'It is possible that the poem ended originally with v. 16, and that vv. 17-19 are an addition.'

so RV. margins a and b); and (2) That I must wait calmly for the day of trouble, for its coming up against the people (Israel) to troop upon it (Ewald: so RV. margins a and c). But the context seems decidedly to require that the 'day of trouble' should come up not against Israel, but against Israel's foe: (1) implies also a forced construction of the Heb. יָגִידוּ; and the figure 'troop upon' in (2) is a strange and improbable one to apply to a 'day' ('invade' is a paraphrase which conceals the difficulty). It is some objection to all these renderings that to rest nowhere else means to wait calmly. Marti reads (with Wellh.) וַחֲתִי אֶשָּׁר [or חָתָו: see Ps. xxxvii. 31] וַחֲתִי אֶשָּׁר for וַחֲתִי אֶשָּׁר, and in the last clause עַם לֹעַם: we then get (after 'bones'), and my steps tremble where I stand; (but) I shall rest in the day of trouble, when the people that troopeth upon me cometh up; i. e. the poet, speaking in Israel's name, trembles at the prospect of Yahweh's appearing (vv. 4-15), but is nevertheless confident that he will have peace in the day of trouble, viz. through Yahweh's striking down his nation's assailants. This yields a good sense, and may be right: the case is one in which it is impossible to speak with confidence.

- 11 Yet I will rejoice in the LORD,
I will joy in the God of my salvation.
19 Jehovah, the Lord, is my strength,
And he maketh my feet like hinds' feet,

*For the fig tree doth not bud (LXX bear),
And there is no increase in the vines;
The produce of the olive hath failed,
And the fields yield no food;
The flock is cut off from the fold,
And there is no herd in the stalls.*

This is how the verse ought to read. For increase, see Lev. xxvi. 4; Ps. lxvii. 6; Zech. viii. 12: for fail (lit. 'lie,' 1 K. xiii. 18), Hos. ix. 2. Meat in RV. does not mean flesh: the word has its old, but now obsolete, sense of food in general, noticed on i. 17.

18. But I (emph.). Introducing an antithesis, as often in the Psalms (e. g. Pss. v. 7, xiii. 5, xxxi. 14). The speaker is the nation (or the prophet representing the nation): 'in spite of calamities (v. 17) the nation will joy in God; though earthly blessings perish, He remains their portion. The joy is partly a present one in the possession of God, as Ps. lxxiii. 23; and partly one of hope in His future salvation' (Dav.).

the God of my salvation. Or, deliverance (v. 8). The title is a frequent one; e. g. Is. xvii. 10; Ps. xviii. 46, xxiv. 5, xxv. 5, xxvii. 9.

19. The nation still speaks, expressing its confidence in Yahweh, as the source of its strength, who gives it the means of overcoming all its enemies, and plants it securely in its own land. The verse is full of reminiscences of Ps. xviii. 32, 33.

my might. Cf. Ps. xviii. 32 'the God who girdeth me with might.' Not the word generally used when God is called 'my strength' (Ex. xv. 2 al.).

And he maketh, &c. Varied (in the Heb. word for maketh) from Ps. xviii. 33<sup>a</sup>. The allusion is to the swiftness and sureness of foot which are characteristic of the hind, and which make it an apt type of the brave and successful warrior (Ps. xviii. 33; see 2 S. i. 23, 1 Ch. xii. 8). At the same time the comparison suggests 'the freshness of life, the power and confidence in action, which are felt to be drawn from God' (Dav.).

And he maketh me to tread, &c. Varied from Ps. xviii. 33<sup>b</sup> ('maketh me to stand'). RV. retains walk from AV.; but tread is (like the Heb.) a more uncommon and choicer word, besides being the one used in the same phrase (in both AV. and RV.) in Dt. xxxiii. 29, and (of Yahweh) in Am. iv. 12; Mic. i. 2; Job

And will make me to walk upon mine high places.

For the Chief Musician, on my stringed instruments.

ix. 8. To 'tread upon the high places' of a land is a phrase implying triumphal possession of it (cf. Dt. xxxiii. 29, and, with 'maketh to ride,' Dt. xxxii. 13, Is. lviii. 14)—here, with 'my,' of the mountain-ranges of Judah, on which Yahweh enables His people to step securely by giving them victory over their foes. The words express the final triumph of the people of God over the powers opposed to it.

For the Chief Musician, &c. The subscription to the ode, indicating that it was taken from some collection of Psalms sung in the Temple services. The expression 'Chief Musician' occurs otherwise only in the titles to fifty-four Psalms—Ps. iv, &c. It is in the Heb. the participle of a verb found only in late Hebrew (Chr., Ezr.), and signifying to oversee or superintend a work, 1 Ch. xxiii. 4; 2 Ch. ii. 2, 18, xxxiv. 12, 13; Ezr. iii. 8, 9; in music, to lead, viz. with harps, 1 Ch. xv. 21. To judge from 1 Ch. xv. 21, the mēnazzeāh was, in modern phraseology, the leader of the band, who may very likely have had under his charge other matters connected with the musical services of the Temple (e.g. he may have been the director of the music generally). 'For the leader of the band' will mean, presumably, either to be arranged by him for music, or to be performed under his direction, perhaps both.

on my stringed instruments. If the pronoun is correct, it can only refer to the worshipping congregation. That, however, is not natural in a subscription forming no part of the original ode. More probably the pronoun (which is only a single letter in the Hebrew) should be deleted: the entire note will then be exactly the same as that found in the titles of Pss. iv, vi, liv, lv, lxi, lxvii, lxxvi.

Additional Note on Hab. iii.

Storms of great violence, such as the one imagined by Habakkuk, visit the Sinaitic Peninsula every year, and produce the floods, or seils (i. e. 'torrents'), so much dreaded by the Bedawin. The Rev. F. W. Holland gives a graphic description<sup>1</sup> of one which he witnessed on December 3 1867, when encamped some way up the Wādy Feirān (which runs up from the west to Jebel Mūsā), almost opposite to the mouth of Wády 'Aleyát. The following is an abridgement of his description. 'At 4.30 p.m. a few heavy drops of rain began to fall; and at 5 a tremendous thunderstorm began. The rain fell in torrents, and the roar of the thunder echoing from peak to peak, and the howling of the wind, were quite deafening. It soon grew dark, but the flashes of lightning were so incessant that we could see everything around us [cf. Hab. iii. 3, 4, 11]. In less than a quarter of an hour every ravine and gully in the mountains was pouring down a foaming stream; and soon afterwards a tremendous torrent burst down a little wády just below our tent, carrying with it a mass of débris into Wády Feirán [cf. Nah. i. 5; Jud. v. 4<sup>b</sup>, 5]. The bed of Wády Feirán was as yet dry; but soon a white line of foam appeared in the watercourse, and quickly grew in size.' Wave after wave came rolling down; the torrent rose higher and higher; a few minutes after 6, when it had ceased raining, a great wave suddenly demolished the wall near which Mr. Holland and his party had taken refuge, and forced them to retreat for their lives further up the mountain-side. The storm was now over, and the moon soon began to shine out brightly. 'It was a grand but awful sight. It seemed almost impossible to believe that scarcely more than an hour's rain could turn a dry desert wády upwards of 300 yards broad into a foaming torrent from 8 to 10 feet deep [cf. Hab. iii. 9<sup>o</sup>, 10]. Yet there it was, roaring and tearing down, and carrying with it tangled masses of tamarisks, and hundreds of palm-trees. A few miles above where I stood a whole Arab encampment was swept away from the mouth of Wády Umm Tákhah, and thirty persons perished, besides scores of sheep and other animals. The roar of the torrent was tremendous; the boulders ground along beneath the water with the noise as of a hundred mills at work, and every now and then the ground on which I stood shook again as some huge rock charged down against it from Wády 'Aleyát [cf. Nah. i. 5, 6<sup>b</sup>]. At 9.30 the flood was rapidly subsiding; and by the next morning a gently flowing stream, but a few yards broad and a few inches deep, was all that remained of it. But the whole bed of Wády Feirán had been changed: huge banks of sand and stones had taken the place of hollows, and large groves of tamarisks and palm-trees had become barren wastes of sand.' This seil, Captain (afterwards Sir Charles) Wilson discovered subsequently, had swept away so much of the soil of the Wády Feirán as to lower its bed by 8 feet. From the suddenness with which such storms arise, and produce a seil, the Bedawín of the Peninsula will never encamp in the bed of a wády, or in spots where precipitous mountain-sides would prevent a hasty retreat in case of need.

INTRODUCTION

§ 1. THE PERSON AND DATE OF ZEPHANIAH.

ZEPHANIAH<sup>1</sup> is earlier in date than Habakkuk, and in all probability earlier also than Nahum. For he mentions various forms of idolatry as still openly practised in Judah (i. 4, 5), which were publicly put down by Josiah in the reformation which followed the discovery of Deuteronomy in the Temple in his 18th year, B.C. 621 (2 K. xxiii. 4, 5, 12); and the general picture of the moral and religious condition of the people, as implied in i. 8, 9, 12, iii. 1-4, 7, points also to the same period: the reformation is still in the future. Of the prophet himself nothing is known beyond what is stated in the title (i. 1); but inasmuch as his genealogy, contrary to the usual practice (see e.g. Is. i. 1; Hos. i. 1; Ez. i. 3), is carried back to the fourth generation, it has been inferred that his great-great-grandfather, Hezekiah, must have been a man of some note, and in fact that he was the king of that name; so that, if this inference be correct, Zephaniah will have been related to the royal family of Judah.

A passage from an apocryphal prophecy, ascribed to Zephaniah<sup>2</sup>, is quoted by Clement of Alexandria (Strom. v. 11, § 77): 'And the spirit took me, and carried me up into the fifth heaven, and I saw angels called lords, and their diadem placed upon them by the Holy Spirit, and the throne of each of them was seven times (brighter) than the light of the rising sun, dwelling in temples of salvation, and hymning the unspeakable God Most High.' Some other fragments, preserved in a Coptic version, have also been discovered and published lately: see Schürer, Gesch. d. Volk. Isr., ed. 3, iii. 271 f.

§ 2. THE CONTENTS AND CHARACTERISTICS OF THE PROPHECY OF ZEPHANIAH.

The prophecy of Zephaniah may be divided conveniently into three parts—the menace (ch. i), the admonition (ii. 1—iii. 7), and the promise (iii. 8–20).

I. Chap. i. Here Zephaniah proclaims the approach of a universal judgement, which, embracing (vv. 2, 3) the world at large, will alight in particular upon Judah and Jerusalem, and carry off thence all idolaters and apostates (vv. 4–6). Let the earth be silent! for a ‘day of Yahweh’ is at hand, a day of sacrifice, in which the victims are the Jewish people, and those invited to partake in the sacrificial meal are the heathen nations, ‘sanctified’ for the occasion. Three classes are mentioned particularly as those whom the judgement will sweep away—viz. court officials, who either aped foreign fashions or were foreigners themselves, and who were addicted to corruption and intrigue; the Phœnician merchants in Jerusalem; and Jews sunk in unbelief and religious indifferentism (vv. 8–13). In vv. 14–18 the prophet develops the figure of the ‘day of Yahweh,’ describing the terrors by which it will be accompanied, and the onset of the fierce, inexorable foe, who will be the instrument for carrying out Yahweh’s purposes.

II. Zephaniah now urges his people to repent, if perchance they may escape, in the day when the storm bursts (ii. 1–3). The Philistines, and Moab and Ammon, Judah’s neighbours on the W. and E. (vv. 4–11), as also the more distant Ethiopia, and Nineveh (vv. 12–15), representing the great empire of Assyria, will all be overwhelmed by the judgement. From Nineveh the prophet turns to address Jerusalem: he reproaches her rulers and leading men with avarice, worldliness, and dishonesty; and blames her for her refusal to take warning from the fate which had overtaken other nations (iii. 1–7).

III. Let the faithful in Jerusalem, then, wait patiently, until the approaching judgement is completed (iii. 8), and the 'remnant of Israel,' purified of all its proud and worldly members, will in faith and humility cleave sincerely to its God, and dwell in safety upon their own land (iii. 11-14).

Vv. 9, 10 interrupt the connexion, and are perhaps the insertion of some later prophet: they are an anticipation,—like Is. ii. 2-4, xviii. 7, xix. 23-25, Jer. xiii. 19, for instance,—of the golden age in which the nations of the world will unite harmoniously in the service of Yahweh.

In conclusion the prophet, in jubilant tones, bids the purified nation exult in the God who now dwells, as a powerful and loving protector, in their midst (vv. 14-17), and who will bring back those still in exile, and give His restored people 'a name and a renown' among all the nations of the earth (vv. 18-20).

Marti has drawn out well the historical importance of Zephaniah's book. It is, he points out, an invaluable document, springing out of the years immediately preceding Josiah's reformation; for we hear in it a voice testifying to the religious and social condition of Jerusalem at the time, and evidently proceeding from the same prophetic circle in which the Deuteronomic law originated. We realize from it the opposition which then arose against the intrusion into Judah of foreign influences and foreign customs, which were undermining the national religion, and destroying the simplicity of life and manners which had been inherited from the past. Zephaniah is a true successor of Amos, Hosea, and Isaiah, who saw in the ascetic Nazirites genuine Israelites (Am. ii. 11), repudiated foreign rites as Baal-worship in disguise, and combated energetically the evils which the increasing luxury brought in its train, the oppression of the poor, injustice in trade (Am. viii. 5), and a supercilious disregard of Yahweh's moral demands. Zephaniah gives us a glimpse of the religious syncretism, which Manasseh had favoured and promoted; and makes us realize how the cults of neighbouring peoples, and especially of the Assyrians, had penetrated into Judah (Zeph. i. 4 f., 8 f.).

In his prophetic ideals Zephaniah follows largely in the footsteps of Isaiah. With Zephaniah, as with Isaiah, the central idea is that of a judgement, to be executed by Yahweh upon Judah, which will sweep away from it the idolaters, the men of violence and wrong, judges and others in high position who forget their responsibilities, false prophets and profane priests, the hardened men of the world who have no religion at all ('the men that are thickened upon their lees,' i. 12), and who think that Yahweh can do 'neither good nor evil,' and the impenitent who will not listen to 'correction' (i. 4-6, 8 f., 12, iii. 2, 3 f., 11); but which will leave behind a meek and pious 'remnant,' who trust simply in their God, and do their duty in every way to their neighbours (ii. 3, iii. 12, 13), who have no longer anything to fear from their ancient enemies (ii. 4-15), but live a life of peace and felicity under Yahweh's immediate kingship (ii. 7, iii. 14-17). This is, in general, the doctrine of Isaiah (i. 25-27, iv. 3-6, xxviii. 5 f., xxx. 19-26, 27-33, xxxi. 8 f., xxxii. 16-19; cf. on Zeph. iii. 11); though Zephaniah emphasizes more strongly than Isaiah does the particular virtue of 'humility.' But with Zephaniah the judgement, more distinctly than in Isaiah (iii. 13), is a world-judgement; it embraces all nations (i. 2 f., iii. 8), not Israel only (i. 4 ff.). The figure of Yahweh's 'Day' he doubtless owes to Is. ii. 12 ff.; but the imagery of war and invasion, under which its approach is pictured (i. 14-18), is Zephaniah's own, and was no doubt suggested to him by the recent irruption of hordes of Scythians into Asia (cf. p. 119), who seem also to be referred to in some of Jeremiah's prophecies dating from the same time (as Jer. v. 15-17, vi. 1-6, 22-25).

The great and abiding religious value of the book consists in the profoundly earnest moral tone which pervades it, and in the prophet's deep sense of the sin of his people and of the stern need which impels Yahweh, who would only too gladly rejoice over His people, if it would permit Him to do so (iii. 17), to visit it with a discipline which will purge away its unworthy members. Zephaniah's gospel has been described as 'simple and austere.' It is true, he goes back to and insists with pathetic eloquence upon the most primary and elementary of religious duties, earnestness and sincerity of life, justice and integrity, humility, and a simple trust in God. 'A thorough purgation, the removal of the wicked, the sparing of the honest and the meek; insistence only upon the rudiments of morality and religion; faith in its simplest form of trust in a righteous God, and character in its basal elements of meekness and truth—these alone survive the judgement' (G. A. Smith, p. 71). He does not, as other prophets commonly do, call the wicked to repent, or dwell upon the divine grace which is ever ready to forgive the penitent: it may be that the doom seemed to him to be too imminent; the time for pleading was past; there remained only the separation of the evil from the good. But he recognizes and teaches clearly the moral qualities which have a value in Yahweh's eyes, and which will not be swept away when the judgement comes (cf. Is. xxxiii. 14-16).

As happens, however, sometimes with the prophets, Zephaniah hardly presents a logical and consistent picture of the future. He does not explain what is to become of the nations alluded to in i. 13-18, after they have performed their work of judgement upon Israel. As Robertson Smith has pointed out (EB. iv. 5403-4), he seems to have borrowed the idea of a chastising nation from Isaiah, but to have developed it without that definite relation to present political facts which Isaiah's construction has: the foreign conqueror by whom Judah is to be chastised, and Nineveh and Ethiopia destroyed, is 'brought on the stage, but never,' like Isaiah's Assyrians, 'taken off it. It is safe to conclude that the principal actor in the prophetic drama,'—suggested, as Rob. Smith also thought, by the Scythians,—'was not as real and prominent a figure in Zephaniah's political horizon as Assyria was in the horizon of Isaiah.' And how in other respects is the future to be constituted? Is the purified Israel to be the sole nation left upon the earth? Even if ii. 11, iii. 10-11 be Zephaniah's, the relation between the nations who are converted and saved, and those who are destroyed (ch. ii, iii. 8), is not clearly defined. The fact is, the prophets project great ideals upon the future: while each picture, taken by itself, is the expression of a truth, they are not always careful to harmonize their ideals in details.

§ 3. CRITICAL QUESTIONS CONNECTED WITH THE BOOK OF ZEPHANIAH.

'The genuineness and integrity of the short Book of Zephaniah,' Robertson Smith wrote in 1888<sup>1</sup>, 'do not seem to be open to reasonable doubt'; and he adds (in answer to Stade, who even then, on account of the ideas expressed in them, had questioned ii. 1-3, 11, iii) that 'though the sequence of thought is not as smooth as a Western reader may desire, a single leading motive runs through the whole, and the first two chapters would be incomplete without the third.' But times have changed since 1888; and now considerable parts of the book are regarded by most critics as later additions to the original prophecy of Zephaniah. Thus Kuenen in 1889, while defending ii. 1-3, 11 against Stade, allowed that iii. 14-20—on account, chiefly, of the great contrast between it and the denunciations of i. 2—ii. 1, iii. 1-7—was a supplement, dating probably from shortly after the restoration in B. C. 536. Wellhausen (1892, 1898) is suspicious of ii. 3, and rejects ii. 7<sup>a,c</sup>, 8-11; he treats ch. iii as an appendix, added subsequently in two stages, first iii. 1-7 (cf. Mic. vii. 1-6), and then iii. 8-20 (cf. Mic. vii. 7-20)—iii. 8-20 being separated from iii. 1-7 on account of the sudden change of tone and subject. Davidson (1896) defends ch. ii as a whole, admitting only (p. 102) that ii. 4-15 may in parts have been expanded: in ch. iii he is disposed to question v. 11 (which is textually obscure and uncertain), and vv. 14-20 (substantially upon Wellhausen's grounds). Nowack (1897, 1904) rejects ii. 3, 7<sup>a,c</sup>, 8-11, 15, iii. 9-10, 14-20. G. A. Smith (1898) accepts all ch. ii except vv. 8-11; in ch. iii he regards vv. 9-10 as 'obviously a later insertion,' and iii. 14-20 as clearly a lyrical epilogue of peace and hope (pp. 44 f.), a 'new song from God' (p. 73), which came to some prophet shortly after the return, and expressed for the remnant that survived, the 'afflicted and poor' people of v. 12, the brighter hopes which the restoration fostered. Marti, lastly (1904), retains for Zeph. only i. 7, 2, 3<sup>aa</sup>, 4, 5, 8<sup>aβ-11a</sup>, 12, 13<sup>a</sup>, 14-17 (except 17<sup>av</sup>), ii. 1, 2<sup>a</sup>, 4, 5-7, 12-14—the rest of the book consisting of additions reflecting the hopes and feelings of later times, iii. 1-7 being added first; then iii. 8, 11-15, 17-19, and various passages in chs. i, ii, for the purpose of changing the original prophecy of Zephaniah into an eschatological prophecy of the final judgement upon all men<sup>1</sup>; and, lastly, ii. 11 and iii. 9-10, expressing greater friendliness of feeling towards the heathen.

It is difficult not to consider the grounds for so largely limiting the genuine text of Zeph. as sometimes arbitrary, and in other cases insufficient. Thus the principal reasons upon which ii. 8-11 is rejected are that there was no sufficient motive for the mention of these countries c. 625 B. C., and that the reproaches of ii. 8, 10 presuppose the destruction of Jerusalem in 586, which gave occasion for them (Ez. xxv. 3, 6, 8); but is our knowledge of the times sufficient to justify either of these contentions? It is also urged against ii. 8-11 that these verses differ metrically from the context (Nowack, Smith, pp. 42 f.; cf. Marti, who, however, has to alter vv. 5-7 to reduce them to metre). This argument would be weightier if the principles, and rules for the application, of Hebrew metrical forms were more clearly ascertained than they at present are; but though much has been written lately on the subject of Hebrew metre, and though Duhm and Marti have thrown,—often, it is true, at the cost of very considerable textual alterations,—the Psalms, and the whole of the poetical parts of Job, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and the Minor Prophets, into metrical forms<sup>1</sup>, it may be doubted whether the time is yet ripe for making metre a criterion of authorship. As regards the later ideas alleged to occur in parts of Zeph., it may be questioned whether it has yet been conclusively shown that they point necessarily to an age later than that of Zephaniah himself. And it is difficult also to understand why iii. 14-20 should be deemed inconsistent with ch. i: for though Israel is threatened with judgements in ch. i, and is the recipient of promises in iii. 14-20, yet it is not the same Israel in the two cases: and where is the inconsistency in a prophet announcing judgements upon the degenerate Israel of the present, and promising blessings to the purified and regenerate Israel ('the remnant,' ii. 7, 9, iii. 12, 13) of the future? It is, however, possible that ii. 7<sup>e</sup> and iii. 18-20 (presupposing restoration from exile: see on ii. 7), and ii. 11 and iii. 9 f. (on account of their very imperfect connexion with the context: see the notes), may be later additions to the original text of Zeph.: though, as Jeremiah, his younger contemporary, foresaw not only exile, but restoration from exile, Zephaniah himself may have added iii. 18-20 many years after the rest of his book was written, at a time when exile was seen more clearly to be inevitable than was the case in 626 or 625.

ZEPHANIAH

THE word of the LORD which came unto Zephaniah 1 the son of Cushi, the son of Gedaliah, the son of Amariah, the son of Hezekiah, in the days of Josiah the son of Amon, king of Judah.

[Z] I will utterly consume all things from off the face 2 of the ground, saith the LORD. I will consume man and 3 beast; I will consume the fowls of the heaven, and the fishes of the sea, and the stumblingblocks with the wicked; and I will cut off man from off the face of

1. 1. Title.

The word of Yahweh which came unto. The title, as Hos. i. 1; Joel i. 1; Mic. i. 1: the expression, the word of Yahweh came (הָיָה = ἐγένετο Luke iii. 2), is also common besides, especially in Jer., Ezek., and Zech. i-viii.

the son of Hezekiah. See p. 103.

2-18. Description of the coming judgement. It falls first, with destructive force, upon the world at large, and afterwards in particular upon Judah and Jerusalem.

3. The 'all things' of v. 2 particularized: the judgement will sweep away not only man, the real offender, but beasts, and fowl, and fishes as well; cf. Gen. vii. 21, 23; for the inclusion of fishes, also, Hos. iv. 3, Ez. xxxviii. 19.

and the stumblingblocks with the wicked: i. e. all objects giving occasion to (moral and religious) 'stumbling' (cf. Mt. xiii. 41; Ez. xiv. 3, 4, 7), especially those connected with idolatry, together with the wicked themselves. The clause is, however, open to the suspicion of being an addition to the original text of Zeph., made by one who desiderated an express mention of the objects referred to; for 'it introduces an idea not in harmony with the rest of the verse' (Davidson); the 'wicked' are of course included implicitly in the terms of lines 1 and 4; and the word rendered 'stumblingblocks' does not elsewhere have this meaning, but signifies a 'fallen mass' (Is. iii. 6).

4 the ground, saith the LORD. And I will stretch out mine hand upon Judah, and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and I will cut off the remnant of Baal from 4-8. But the prophet is concerned chiefly with the judgement as it affects his own people; and he proceeds accordingly to describe the sins of Judah and Jerusalem, especially their idolatries, which have called it forth. For Israel as the centre, or culminating point, of judgement, cf. Am. i-ii; Is. ii. 12-iii. 5, iii. 13-14.

4. stretch out mine hand upon: viz. in order to smite, as Is. xiv. 26, xxiii. 11 al.

the remnant of Baal. It seems clear that Zephaniah prophesied before the reformation in Josiah's 18th year; and hence the expression 'remnant' (which appears to imply that in the main the worship of Baal had been already extirpated) occasions difficulty. The supposition that the reference is to the idolatry that was spared in the reformation which, according to 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3-7, took place in Josiah's 12th year, is questionable: for the historical character of that reformation is very doubtful: it is not mentioned in the nearly contemporary narrative of 2 K. xxiii (2 Ch. xxxiv. 3-7 being not excerpted from this narrative, but an addition, evidently the composition of the Chronicler himself), and, in a matter of this kind, the unsupported testimony of the Chronicler alone (writing 350 years afterwards) is of slight weight. However, it is thought by many (Ew., We., Now., Dav.) that 'the remnant' may mean '(even to) the last remnant,' 'the last vestiges' (cf. Is. xiv. 22): the meaning will then be that the worship of Baal will be wholly destroyed out of Jerusalem; and of course this might be said before Josiah's reform. The LXX, however, for remnant (שאר) read name (שם),—perhaps rightly (so Marti): cf. Hos. ii. 17; Zech. xiii. 2, as well as the next clause here.

Baal. The god of the Phoenicians and Canaanites, whose worship possessed a great fascination for the Israelites, and often made its way into both Israel (cf. 1 K. xviii; 2 K. x. 19) and Judah (2 K. xxi. 3; Jer. vii. 9, xi. 13, &c.). The word 'Baal' signifies owner, possessor; and applied to a god it denotes him properly as the owner of a particular region or place (as Baal of Peor, Baal of Lebanon, Baal of Tyre, &c.): there were thus numerous local Baals (hence the plural, 'the Baalim,' Jer. ii. 23 al),—Baal in the singular (in the Heb. 'the Baal') denoting the particular 'Baal' prominent at a given time or place. The Baals were regarded generally as the givers of the fruits of the soil, and the increase of the flocks, and were worshipped by offerings of the products of nature (Hos. ii. 7, 12, 13).

Kēmārim. In the sing. kōmer, an Aramaic word for 'priest,' found in inscriptions (G. A. Cooke, North-Semitic Inscriptions, nos. 64, 65, 69, 98), and also common in Syriac: in the O. T. used only of idolatrous priests, and no doubt denoting properly the priests of foreign cults, introduced with their rites into Israel (so here); elsewhere applied contemptuously to the priests of an unspiritual or syncretistic worship of Yahweh, viz. Hos. x. 5, of the priests of the golden calves, and 2 K. xxiii. 5 of the priests of the high places, put down by Josiah.

5-6. Three classes of the laity particularized, who will also be swept away in the judgement.

5. (1) Those who practise open idolatry, and, in particular, worship the host of heaven upon the housetops. The allusion is to the worship of the heavenly bodies, a cult which became very prevalent in Judah in the later period of the Kings: see 2 K. xxi. 3, 5; Jer. viii. 2, xix. 13. The Israelites are warned against being seduced into it in Dt. iv. 19, xvii. 3.

upon the housetops. Where they would obtain a more open view of the objects of their adoration: cf. Jer. xix. 13, xxxii. 29; also 2 K. xxiii. 12.

which swear to Yahweh (i. e. swear fealty to Yahweh, Is. xix. 18, xlv. 25) and swear by this other god (i. e. and yet, when they come to take an oath, have the name of Milcom or Molech on their lips:—contrast the law of Dt. vi. 13, x. 20 'and by his name shalt thou swear')<sup>1</sup>. Such 'syncretism' was common in the polytheistic worships of antiquity; cf. in Israel Ez. xxiii. 39.

Malcam. As pointed by the Massorites this means 'their king.' Most moderns, altering the vocalization, read with Codd. 22, 36, 56 of LXX, Pesh., and Vulg., Milcom—the name of the turned back from following the LORD; and those that have not sought the LORD, nor inquired after him.

national god of the Ammonites (1 K. xi. 5, 7 [read with LXX Milcom for Molech], 33; 2 K. xxiii. 13; Jer. xlix. 1, 3 [where the context relates to Ammon, so that Milcom is undoubtedly to be read, with LXX, Pesh., Vulg., for Malcam]). Although, however, Solomon, to gratify his foreign wives, built high places to Milcom (1 K., 2 K., ll. cc.) and other gods, the worship of Milcom is not alluded to elsewhere in the O. T., and does not seem, therefore, to have been prevalent in Israel; hence Davidson and G. F. Moore (EB. iii. 3085) think a reference to him here to be improbable; they accordingly retain the Mass. vocalization, but render their king, supposing the reference to be to the god who bore in particular the title of 'king,' i. e. Molech (or, as the name ought to be pronounced, Milk<sup>1</sup>), the Phoenician god, whose inhuman rites, as 2 K. xxiii. 10, Jer. vii. 31, Ez. xvi. 20f., and other passages, sufficiently show, were prevalent in Judah in the age of Zephaniah.

6. (3) Those who have no thought or care for religion at all, who are turned back from following Yahweh, and that have not sought Yahweh, nor inquired after him, i. e. the religiously indifferent.

7. In view of this approaching judgement, the prophet pauses to bid all prepare to meet it with becoming reverence.

Hold thy peace: lit. Hush! or Be still! cf. on Hab. ii. 20. for the day of Yahweh is at hand (or near). The same words, v. 14 (+ the great), Ob. 15; Is. xiii. 6; Ez. xxx. 3; Joel i. 15, iii. 14 (cf. ii. 1). The 'day of Yahweh' is an expression used frequently by the prophets. From Am. v. 18 we learn that it was a current expression in Israel in Amos's time: the people believed that Yahweh would appear ere long, and confer some crowning victory upon His people, and they even 'desired' the advent of the day on which He would do this. Amos replies that whether this 'day' would be what they expected it to be depended upon their moral condition: it would be a day on which Yahweh would manifest Himself against sin, whether in His own people or among foreign nations. Amos thus transformed a popular idea; and the prophets use the expression in this transformed sense to denote the day on which Yahweh is conceived as manifesting Himself in His fullness, striking down wrong and illusion and human pride (Is. ii. 12 ff.), and giving the final victory to righteousness and truth. The presentiment of the near approach of 'Yahweh's day' was often awakened in the minds of the prophets by some striking occurrence (as in Joel by a calamitous visitation of locusts), and especially by some great moral or political crisis. Cf. Davidson, Theol. of the OT., pp. 374 ff.

prepared a sacrifice. The sacrifice, which is Israel, is slain, and the guests who are to eat of the sacrificial meal, i. e. the foes who are to execute the judgement upon Israel (cf. vv. 15-17), are invited. The perfects are 'prophetic' perfects: the prophet pictures the destruction of Judah as already accomplished. For the figure, cf. Jer. xlvi. 10, Is. xxxiv. 6, Ez. xxxix. 17. For 'guests' (lit. called or invited ones), cf. 1 K. i. 9 'called,' 41 'guests' (lit. called ones); and, at a sacrifice, 1 S. ix. 13 'they that be bidden (called),' 22, xvi. 3, 5. The foes whom Zephaniah in all probability has in his mind are the Scythians (cf. pp. 10, 119), whose movements in the North seem to have suggested to Jeremiah also at about the same time (cf. Jer. iv. 13, 15-17, 29, v. 15-17, vi. 22 f.) that they would ere long invade and ravage Judah, and who actually, on their way to Egypt, advanced through Palestine as far as Ashkelon (Hdt. i. 105).

sanctified: viz. to take part in the sacrificial meal: see 1 S. xvi. 5. There is, however, no doubt an allusion to the use of the same word of war and of warriors,—whether the idea was that a war undertaken in the name of the national god, Yahweh, was a holy one, or whether the reference was to the sacrifices with which a campaign was opened: see RVm. of Jer. vi. 4, xxii. 7, li. 27 f.; and cf. Is. xiii. 3, where Yahweh's 'consecrated (or sanctified) ones' mean the people who are to be the destroyers of Babylon.

8-12. The classes who in particular will be swept away by the judgement: viz. princes and court-officials who assumed foreign fashions, and perverted justice for purposes of gain (v. 8 f.); the merchants and traffickers in Jerusalem (v. 10 f.); and the Jews sunk in religious indifferentism (v. 12 f.).

8. punish. Heb. visit upon, as regularly, especially in Jer., as ix. 25, xi. 22, xiii. 21.

the princes: i. e. the nobles, especially those entrusted with sons, and all such as are clothed with foreign apparel.

 9 And in that day I will <sup>a</sup> punish all those that leap over the threshold, which fill their master's house with violence 10 and deceit. And in that day, saith the LORD, there shall be the noise of a cry from the fish gate, and an howling judicial or other responsible offices, which they often abused (cf. iii. 3, Is. i. 23, Mic. vii. 3, Ez. xxii. 27; and contrast Is. xxxii. 1).

the king's sons. The expression means the royal house in general, and is not to be limited to the sons of the reigning king <sup>1</sup> (cf. 1 K. xxii. 26; 2 K. xi. 2; Jer. xxxvi. 26, xxxviii. 6).

with foreign apparel. Depreciating their own nationality, and parading their sympathy with some foreign country, such as Egypt or Assyria (Jer. ii. 18).

that leap over the threshold. The allusion appears to be to some superstitious foreign custom. It is a widespread belief, found in many parts of the world <sup>2</sup>, that it is unlucky to step upon a threshold; and from 1 S. v. 5 we learn in particular that it was a Philistine custom not to tread upon the sacred threshold of a sanctuary (which is what the Hebrew word used here and elsewhere denotes, 1 S. l. c., Ez. ix. 3 al.). The reference here is not improbably to the foreign bodyguard of the Jewish kings (cf. 2 S. xv. 18; 1 K. i. 38), who, like Oriental janissaries generally, were addicted to corruption and intrigue, and so could be spoken of as filling their master's house with violence and deceit <sup>3</sup>.

the fish gate. So called, probably, from its being near the fish-market. It is mentioned besides in Neh. iii. 3, xii. 39; 2 Ch. xxxiii. 14; and appears from the first two of these passages to have been in the N. wall of the city, not far from the NW. corner. Judah was approached regularly from the N. by an invader (cf. Is. xiv. 31, Jer. i. 14): and this is doubtless the reason why one of the gates on the N. of Jerusalem is here mentioned first.

the second (quarter). Mentioned also in 2 K. xxii. 14; the city was perhaps divided into districts for administrative purposes. Or (Hitz., Now., Dav.) the 'second quarter' may have been so named from its having been recently added to the city; in 2 Ch. xxxiii. 14 Manasseh is stated to have built an 'outer wall' extending as far as the fish gate, and the name may have been given to the ground thus enclosed. The site is not known.

and of a great crashing. Lit. a great breaking (Jer. iv. 6, vi. 1, xlviii. 3, l. 22, li. 54: EVV. 'destruction'): the noise of this resounds from the hills (וּבְעִתָּהּ, הָרִים נִשְׁמָע, Ps. cxxv. 2), upon which in particular the N. parts of Jerusalem were built.

11. the Maktesh. Evidently a part of the city in which traders dwelt,—perhaps (Ewald) the 'Phoenician quarter' of Jerusalem (see the next clause). The name means a pounding place, or 'mortar' (Prov. xxvii. 22), and is used fig. in Jud. xv. 19 of a depression in the ground, or 'hollow place.' No doubt it denotes here some basin-like hollow in the city, perhaps the upper part of the Tyropoeon valley (between the E. and W. hills on which Jerusalem was built). It may have been mentioned by the prophet here on account of the omen of its name: it is a place in which people will ere long be 'brayed' (Prov. xxvii. 22) or 'pounded' by the foe.

the people of Canaan. The expression is correctly paraphrased on the margin: the Canaanites, i. e. the Phoenicians (see Gen. x. 15, and cf. Is. xxiii. 11), were the chief traders in Palestine, and so the term came to be used to denote a merchant; see Is. xxiii. 8 (where 'traffickers' is lit. Canaanites), Zech. xiv. 21, Job xli. 6 ('merchants' is lit. Canaanites), Prov. xxxi. 24; and cf. Hos. xii. 7, Ez. xvi. 29 (where RVm. must be followed), xvii. 4 (where 'traffic' is lit. Canaan). However, the 'merchant people' here referred to were, no doubt, principally actual 'Canaanites,' or Phoenicians: cf. Neh. xiii. 16, where Tyrian traders sell fish in Jerusalem. It may be inferred from the present passage that they resided chiefly in the 'Maktesh.'

all they that were laden with silver. Or, with money; the allusion being to the Phoenician merchants, laden with their gains, or with the money required for the purchase of goods.

12. search. The word used implies minute and diligent time, that I will search Jerusalem with <sup>a</sup> candles; and I will <sup>b</sup> punish the men that are <sup>c</sup> settled on their lees, that say in their heart, The LORD will not do good, neither 13 will he do evil. And their wealth shall become a spoil, and their houses a desolation: yea, they shall build houses, but shall not inhabit them; and they shall plant 14 vineyards, but shall not drink the wine thereof. The

with lamps: i.e. so that the darkest corners may be thoroughly explored (Luke xv. 8). The agents by whom the search will be accomplished are the foreign conquerors (cf. v. 13), who would naturally penetrate into the darkest places in quest of treasure (cf. Is. xlv. 3), and at the same time slay those whom they might find concealed in them.

thickened<sup>1</sup> on their lees: i.e. sunk into a state of moral stagnation and spiritual indifference. The figure is taken from wine, which, after the process of fermentation was complete, was left upon its sediment or 'lees' (Is. xxv. 16) 'only long enough to fix its colour and body. If not then drawn off, it grew thick and syrupy—sweeter indeed than the strained wine, and to the taste of some more pleasant, but feeble and ready to decay. "To thicken upon one's lees" became a proverb for sloth, indifference, and the muddy mind' (G. A. Smith, p. 52).

will not do good, &c. A proverbial expression, meaning, will not do anything at all, will, in other words, give no evidence that He exists. Cf. Gen. xxxi. 24; and see especially Is. xli. 23, Jer. x. 5. The men here referred to are those who were utterly indifferent with regard to Yahweh (cf. Ps. xiv. 1), and thought of Him as a lifeless heathen god (Jer. x. 5), who never asserted His power, and had no concern or regard for the affairs of human life.

13. Yahweh, whom they thus despise, will, however, assert Himself: He will 'search' Jerusalem by the hand of the foe; and their substance will be plundered, and their homes ruined.

they shall build houses, &c. Cf. Am. v. 11, Mic. vi. 15, Dt. xxviii. 30, 39; and contrast Is. lxxv. 21.

great day of the LORD is near, it is near and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the LORD; the mighty man crieth there bitterly. That day is a day of <sup>15</sup> wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness, a day of the trumpet and <sup>16</sup>

the passage is suggested probably by the recent irruption into Asia of hordes of Scythians (Hdt. i. 103-6), a wild and fierce people, whose home was N. of the Crimea, but who, like the Huns or Bulgarians of a later day, were apt to make destructive predatory incursions into distant parts. The Scythians seem also to be the 'foe from the north' referred to, at about the same time, in many parts of Jer. iv-vi.

there : the prophet localizes the scene in his imagination (cf. for this use of 'there' Ps. xiv. 5, xxxvi. 12) ; and sees the warrior crying there bitterly, unable to deliver himself (Am. ii. 14-16), and consequently in despair (Jer. xxx. 6 f., Is. xiii. 7).

15. That day is a day of wrath. These words, as rendered in the Vulgate, Dies irae dies illa, form the opening words of the well-known hymn of Thomas of Celano (A. D. c. 1250) on the Last Judgement.

 their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the LORD's wrath; but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy: for he shall make an end,

shouting in the day of battle,' ii. 2 'and Moab shall die . . . amid shouting, and the sound of the horn.'

 in the sense here intended. Cf. Is. ii. 15.

 xxxi. 38, 40), i. e., no doubt, fortified corners of the wall (cf. RVm.).
 So iii. 6, 2 Ch. xxvi. 15.

17. The verse expands the thought of the distress of v. 16.
 Men will be so bewildered by the calamity that they will be helpless, and as little able as the blind to find a way of escape (cf. for the figure Dt. xxviii. 29, Is. lix. 10); their blood will be poured out as though it were of as little account as dust (cf. 'like water,' Ps. lxxix. 3), and their flesh as if it were nothing better than dung.

sinned: in the manner described in vv. 4-6, 8-12.

their flesh. The word is not the usual Heb. word for 'flesh,' and the meaning has been questioned: but it has support from Arabic (cf. Job xx. 23<sup>o</sup> 'into his flesh').

as dung. The comparison (though the Heb. word used is different), as 1 K. xiv. 10, Jer. ix. 22.

18. Even their treasures will not be able to save their lives:
 cf. Ez. vii. 19 (almost the same words), Is. xiii. 17.

land (twice). This rend. suits the context (in which, from
 v. 4, Judah alone has been spoken of); but most moderns (Keil, We., Now., Dav.), observing that this verse closes the entire description, think it more likely that the prophet would revert to the thought with which he opened, vv. 2f., viz. the universality of the judgement, and render therefore each time by earth (cf. iii. 8, where 'earth' is certainly right).

the fire of his jealousy. Cf. on Nah. i. 2. God's 'jealousy' is aroused by the dishonour shown towards Him, and the disregard of what is His rightful due: cf. Dt. iv. 24, xxix. 20; Ez.

xxxvi. 5, xxxviii. 19; Ps. lxxix. 5 (in which passages jealousy is also, as here, compared to fire). The entire clause is repeated in iii. 8 end.

a terrible end. Marg. Or, a speedy end. The Heb. includes both ideas, a sudden terror or dismay being what is denoted by it. Cf. the cognate subst. in Lev. xxvi. 16 ('terror'), Is. lxv. 23, Jer. xv. 8, Ps. lxxviii. 33. The clause seems suggested by Is. x. 23 (the word rendered 'consummation' there being the same as that which is rendered 'end' here).

ii. Having finished his picture of the impending judgement, the prophet now proceeds to urge his people to repent, if perchance they may escape the threatened doom (vv. 1-3), which will engulf, he declares, in succession, the Philistines, Moab and Ammon, Ethiopia, and even Nineveh, the proud capital of Assyria, itself (vv. 4-15).

Gather yourselves together, yea, gather together. The rendering is most uncertain. The Hebrew verb is formed from the Hebrew word for stubble, and means only to gather like stubble (Ex. v. 7, Nu. xv. 32); and a figurative application of such a verb either in the sense of assembling together, or (Keil) of collecting oneself mentally, for self-examination and reflection, the first step towards repentance, is most improbable. Read probably (with Grätz, Cheyne, and Budde), Get you shame, and be ye ashamed, O nation unabashed<sup>1</sup>.

2. The ground for the exhortation in v. 1: be ashamed, and repent of your past lives, before the judgement overtakes you, and it is too late.

before the decree,—i.e. God's decree of judgement,—brings forth, i.e. takes effect (cf. Prov. xxvii. 1). The next words, as they stand, can be rendered only as a parenthesis, as they are on forth, <sup>a</sup> before the day pass as the chaff, before the fierce anger of the LORD come upon you, before the day of the LORD'S anger come upon you. Seek ye the LORD, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgement; seek righteousness, seek meekness: it may be ye shall be the margin: the day,—i.e. the time of respite till the decree takes effect,—passeth away rapidly as the chaff. But both these opening clauses are expressed unnaturally, and yield a forced sense; and there is little doubt that the true text is that restored by Grätz and Wellh., on the basis of the LXX: before ye become as chaff that passeth away. For the comparison with chaff, cf. Ps. i. 4.

before the day, &c. The clause reads like an explanation of the more general words, 'the fierceness of Yahweh's anger,' in the preceding clause: as the Syriac translation of the Hexaplar text of the LXX shows, it was not part of the original LXX; and recent scholars are generally disposed to regard it as a gloss.

3. As the judgement is thus near, let the faithful, especially, seek Yahweh in prayer and supplication (2 S. xii. 16, Hos. v. 6), if perchance they may escape the calamity which will engulf their neighbours; let them follow, even more earnestly than before, righteousness and meekness.

all ye meek of the land. So Is. xi. 4, Ps. lxxvi. 9. Humble would, however, be a better rendering than 'meek'; for the Heb. ʾānāw predicates not an attitude towards men, but an attitude towards God, and denotes one who bows or humbles himself under the hand of God. The word is often used in the prophets and Psalms (e.g. xxxvii. 11) of the pious and faithful worshippers of Yahweh, as opposed to the 'wicked,' the 'evil-doers,' the 'proud,' &c. From another side of their character the same God-fearing Israelites are often spoken of as the 'poor,' or the 'afflicted': see on iii. 12.

his judgement. Rather, his ordinance, as the word is often rendered (e.g. Is. lviii. 2, Jer. viii. 7). Properly, indeed, it means the judgement or decision of a judge: then it comes to mean (as Ex. xxi. 1) a 'judgement' which is made a statute of permanent obligation; and finally, in a wider sense, it is used of a moral or religious ordinance, whether it has originally been prescribed as a particular 'judgement' or not. So Jer. v. 4, 5 (cf. viii. 7).

it may be ye shall be hid, &c. For the figure, cf. Is. xxvi. 20. 'Even amidst what looks like absolute certainty of the Divine judgement, the prophets cannot renounce the idea of the possibility hid in the day of the LORD's anger. For Gaza shall be forsaken, and Ashkelon a desolation: they shall drive out Ashdod at the noonday, and Ekron shall be rooted up. Woe unto the inhabitants of <sup>a</sup>the sea coast, the of the people's repenting and averting the impending wrath: cf. Jer. vii. 5-7, xxvi. 3, xxxvi. 3, 5; Am. v. 6, 15' (Davidson). These 'humble' are naturally those of whom the 'remnant' of vv. 7, 9, iii. 12f. consists, who are to escape the judgement, and form the nucleus of the purer community of the future.

4-14. The ground of the preceding exhortation ('For,' v. 4): the entire heathen world, represented partly by some of Israel's nearest neighbours, partly by ancient and famous nations further off, will be overwhelmed by the judgement. The nations mentioned are intended to represent the world at large.

4-7. The Philistines were old enemies of the Israelites, and ready to harass them whenever the opportunity offered: hence many of the prophets have oracles against them (Am. i. 6-8; Is. xiv. 29-32; Jer. xlvii; Ez. xxv. 15-17; Zech. ix. 5f.).

4. The places mentioned are four of the five principal Philistine cities (1 S. vi. 17), the fifth being Gath. In the Hebrew for 'Gaza shall be forsaken' ('azzāh 'āzūbāh'), and 'Ekron shall be rooted up' ('ekrōn tē'ākēr'), there are assonances, such as the Hebrew prophets love, which cannot be reproduced in English (cf. Mic. i. 10ff., Ez. xxv. 16): each city will fulfil, as it were, the omen of its name.

forsaken: i. e. depopulated; cf. Is. vi. 12, vii. 16.

at the noonday. At the time of the noonday siesta (2 S. iv. 5), and implying consequently a sudden surprise (cf. Jer. xv. 8 'a spoiler at noonday').

5. The entire people and land of the Philistines are here addressed.

Ah! the inhabitants of the region of the sea (RVm.): i. e. of the strip of territory on the Mediterranean Sea, on the W. of Judah, belonging to the Philistines: cf. Ez. xxv. 16 ('the remnant of the sea coast,' of the Philistines then remaining). 'Coast' in RV. is here an archaism, the word being used in its now obsolete sense of side (Fr. côte, Old-Fr. coste, Lat. costa, a rib), border, part, which it often has in AV. (as Ex. x. 4; Dt. ii. 4, xi. 24, xvi. 4, xix. 8,—all changed in RV. to 'border'; Mt. ii. 16, viii. 34, xv. 21; Acts xix. 1), in RV. retained only here and vv. 5, 6. For Ah! see on Nah. iii. 1.

nation of the Cherethites! The word of the LORD is against you, O Canaan, the land of the Philistines; I

the Chērēthites. Apparently the name of a clan, or subdivision, of the Philistines, mentioned besides in 1 S. xxx. 14, and Ez. xxv. 16. Most probably so called as being immigrants from Crete; cf. Am. ix. 7, Dt. ii. 23, which state that the Philistines were immigrants from 'Caphtor,' which is generally identified with Crete.

Canaan. Applied unusually to the land of the Philistines: see, however, Jos. xiii. 3. Wellh., Now. omit it, reading at the same time 'against thee' for 'against them': but the LXX express the same Hebrew text which we have now.

6. RV. is singularly simple and flowing; and no reader would suspect from it the extraordinary Hebrew of which in the middle clause it purports to be the translation. The word rendered 'cottages,' or (RVm.) 'caves,' is otherwise unknown in either sense: and 'with' is a thoroughly illegitimate paraphrase. The text cannot be correct. LXX render (as if they read כרת כרת for בית כרת): And Chērēth (i. e. the land of the Chērēthites, v. 5) shall become an habitation<sup>1</sup> of shepherds (Jer. xxx. 12), and folds for flocks (the country, viz., being depopulated; cf. Is. v. 17, xxvii. 10, Ez. xxv. 5): we may either adopt this, or, treating כרת as a faulty repetition of בית, render simply, And it shall become an habitation, &c.<sup>2</sup>

7. The Philistine country will become a pasture-ground for the remnant of Judah: they will feed their flocks by the sea, and come to rest for the night in the deserted houses of Ashkelon. For the thought of Israel in the future taking possession of the territory of its neighbours, cf. Am. ix. 12, Is. xi. 14, Jer. xlix. 2, Obad. 19-20.

herds and folds for flocks. And the coast shall be for the 7 remnant of the house of Judah; they shall feed their flocks thereupon: in the houses of Ashkelon shall they lie down in the evening; [A] for the LORD their God shall visit them, and bring again their captivity. [Z] I have heard 8 the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children

the remnant of the house of Judah: i. e. those who escape the coming judgement, and, it is implied (see on iii. 11), are righteous, and worthy of God's favour and protection.

thereupon. The Hebrew is upon (or by) them. Read with We., Now., Smith, Marti, by the sea (עַל הַיָּם for עֲלֵיהֶם).

lie down. The word means to lie down as an animal (cf. v. 14): but it is used here fig. of men, as iii. 13, Is. xiv. 30, Job xi. 19.

visit. In a favourable sense, as Jer. xxvii. 22, xxix. 10.

and turn their captivity. The prophet pictures, therefore, the 'remnant' as in exile. This, however, though not impossible in itself, agrees badly with the representation in v. 3 (where Zephaniah holds out to the godly Israelites the hope that they will escape the coming judgement, and consequently not be carried into exile); so that perhaps this and the last clause are a later addition, made by one who did not notice the inconsistency with v. 3.

8-11. The judgement is addressed next to Moab and Ammon, two kindred peoples, who had often in the past shown themselves unfriendly towards Israel, and manifested a haughty and encroaching spirit. The territory of Moab was on the E. of the Dead Sea: that of Ammon was on the NE. of Moab, their principal town being Rabbah (2 S. xii. 26, 29; Jer. xlix. 2), called by the Greeks Philadelphia.

8. I have heard. The speaker is Yahweh (see v. 9). The words read like a reminiscence of Is. xvi. 6 (cf. Jer. xlviii. 29).

the reproach of Moab, &c. Contemptuous and reproachful words uttered against Israel or Yahweh, such as the taunts in Ez. xxv. 3, 6, 8 (cf. xxi. 28), spoken at the time when Jerusalem was taken and burnt by the Chaldeans (B. C. 586),—though this cannot be the occasion actually referred to, unless indeed (see p. 109) vv. 8-10 are an addition to the original prophecy of Zephaniah made by a later writer. The attitude of Moab, especially, towards Israel seems to have been in general arrogant and overweening: cf. 2 S. x. 4; Is. xvi. 6, xxv. 11; Jer. xlviii. 26, 27, 29-30 (expansion of Is. xvi. 6), 42.

of Ammon, wherewith they have reproached my people, and magnified themselves against their border. Therefore as I live, saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah, a possession of <sup>a</sup> nettles, and saltpits, and a perpetual desolation: the residue of my people shall spoil them, and the remnant of my nation against their border. In the endeavour to enlarge their own territory: cf. (of the Ammonites) Am. i. 13, Jer. xlix. 1.

9. as Sodom . . . and as Gomorrah. The site of which is referred to elsewhere also as a salt and barren plain, a type of desolation (Dt. xxix. 23; Is. xiii. 19; Jer. xlix. 18=l. 40).

of nettles. The rendering is uncertain: but, whatever the hārūl may have been, it must have been a plant characteristic of uncultivated places (Job xxx. 7; Prov. xxiv. 31). 'Thorns' in Prov. xxiv. 31 ought to be 'nettles' (cf. Hos. ix. 6, Is. xxxiv. 13); hence hārūl, which stands in the parallel clause, must be something different; and in Syriac hūrōl signifies a vetch (hence RVm.). On the other hand, Job xxx. 7 seems to require some kind of shrub; and whereas the present passage implies that the hārūl would grow in a poor or salt soil, vetches love a good soil. Tristram (NHB. 475) suggests the Prickly Acanthus; Post (DB. s. v.) some kind of thorny shrub such as the Boxthorn, three species of which are indigenous in Palestine, and grow in waste places and salty soil.

saltpits. The comparison is suggested by the country bordering on the Dead Sea. At the SW. of this sea there is a remarkable range of cliffs, some 600 feet high, and 5 miles long, called Jebel Usdum, composed almost entirely of salt—deposited in the remote period when the whole of the Jordan valley, and the depression containing the Dead Sea itself, was a great inland lake. Salt for Jerusalem is still procured chiefly from this district, being partly cut directly from the salt cliffs, partly obtained from pits dug into the sand or slime of the shore, into which the waters of the Dead Sea are admitted, and then allowed to evaporate (cf. the allusion in 1 Macc. xi. 35).

spoil them . . . possess them. The pronouns must refer to 'Moab' and 'the children of Ammon,' the prophet turning from the contemplation of their territory to that of the peoples themselves: they will be plundered by the 'remnant' of Israel, and taken by them for their own possession as slaves (cf. for the thought Is. xiv. 2, lxi. 5).

shall inherit them. This shall they have for their pride, 10 because they have reproached and magnified themselves against the people of the LORD of hosts. [Z] Ye 12

10. This verse finishes and rounds off the passage on Moab and Ammon by repeating the thought of v. 8.

11. Heathen gods will be overthrown ; and men generally will worship Yahweh. The verse agrees badly with its context : the fact that Yahweh will overthrow the heathen gods in general does not seem to be a natural reason ('for') for the destruction of Moab and Ammon ; and v. 12, instead of pursuing the thought of v. 11<sup>b</sup>, resumes the enumeration of particular nations (like vv. 4-9) upon whom the judgement will alight. Many recent scholars think the verse to be an addition by a later writer, who desiderated here some expression of the two thoughts of the destruction of heathen gods, and the recognition of Yahweh by the world in general.

unto them. Over them,—appearing over them in judgement (Zech. ix. 14). The pron. (as the verse stands) refers to Moab and Ammon.

famish. Better, make lean : for the figure, as expressing the weakening or failing of a nation or army, see Is. x. 16, xvii. 4. It is, however, somewhat strange as applied to heathen gods : if the text is correct<sup>1</sup>, the meaning will be that they will be rendered powerless by Yahweh, and so be unable to defend their worshippers ; for the general thought Is. xix. 1-3, Ez. xxx. 13 might then be compared.

every one from his place : i. e. each from the place in which he lives, without,—at least necessarily,—making a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, such as the prophets usually picture the nations as making, after they have been brought to the knowledge of Yahweh, for purposes of worship (Is. ii. 3, lxvi. 23 ; Zech. viii. 22, xiv. 16).

all the isles of the nations. The word rendered isles includes also coast-lands (RVm.), being used primarily of the islands and jutting promontories of the Mediterranean Sea (see Gen. x. 5, Ez. xxvi. 15, 18), though sometimes, especially in the Second Isaiah (e.g. xli. 1, xlix. 1, li. 5), these are taken as representative of the heathen world generally. And the latter, no doubt, is the sense in which the expression is used here.

12. Ethiopians. Heb. Kushites (see on Nah. iii. 9), on the S. of Egypt, taken as an example of a distant (Is. xi. 11) and also famous (Is. xviii. 1 f.) nation, upon which Yahweh's judgement will alight.

also. As well as the Philistines and Moab and Ammon (vv. 4-7, 8-10).

slain by my sword. Cf. Is. lxvi. 16, Jer. xxv. 33.

13 15. In the opposite direction Nineveh, the proud and magnificent capital of Assyria, will be humbled, and become a desolation.

13. against the north. Nineveh was 550 miles NE. of Judah; but Assyrian armies having Palestine as their goal would naturally cross the Euphrates at the great ford of Carchemish, 300 miles W. of Nineveh, and so would make their entrance into Palestine from the north (cf. on i. 10). Hence Assyria, and even Babylon (Zech. ii. 6), though this was due E. of Judah, are designated as the 'north.' See further 'NORTH COUNTRY' in DB.

14. The desolation of Nineveh: its site will become the haunt of wild animals, especially of such as frequent ruins. Cf. the pictures of Babylon in Is. xiii. 21 f., and of Edom in Is. xxxiv. 13-15. The fate of Nineveh is thus worse than that of the Philistine land (v. 6): the Philistine land is depopulated, and becomes a pasture-ground for flocks; Nineveh becomes a waste, haunted only by desert animals.

all the beasts of the nations. The text cannot be in order, 'the nations' being an impossible rendering of נַחֲשׁוֹת, and RVm. implying the addition of a word, 'every' (כָּל: cf. Gen. vii. 14, Ez. xvii. 23, 2 Ch. xxxii. 15), besides giving to נַחֲשׁוֹת the otherwise unsubstantiated sense of 'kind.' We may read נַחֲשׁוֹת 'nations'; or we may follow LXX and read 'all the beasts of the earth' (as Gen. i. 24, Ps. lxxix. 2), supposing (Marti) מִן to have fallen out in the Heb. text, and נִי to be a faulty anticipation of the following נִי; or, with Halévy, read 'of the valley' (נִי for נִי).

the pelican and the porcupine. The pelican is mentioned in Ps. cii. 6, the porcupine in Is. xiv. 23, and both together in Is. xxxiv. 11,—each time as haunting a solitude, or ruined site. The pelican lives upon fish: it abounds, for instance, in the great sandy wastes near the mouths of the Danube, and in the swamps of the Jordan valley and the Orontes. The porcupine is a shy, solitary animal, which might well choose its home among desolate ruins (DB., s. v. 'BITTERN,' as the Heb. kippōd was rendered in AV.). The correctness of the rendering 'porcupine' has been questioned upon zoological grounds; but the ancient versions all so render, and this is also the meaning of the corresponding words in Arabic and Syriac (see further on this question M<sup>c</sup>Lean and Shipley in EB., s. v. 'BITTERN'). The rendering 'bittern' (AV.) appears to have no authority earlier than the sixteenth century.

in the chapters thereof: i. e. in the carved tops of the pillars (1 K. vii. 16, 17, &c.), belonging to the temples or palaces of Nineveh, and pictured as now prostrate upon the ground.

(their) voice shall sing in the windows. The expression is unnatural: read with We., Now., Smith, &c., the little owl for '(their) voice' (קול for נִי),—one of the three species of owl mentioned in Lev. xi. 17 f., which is shown by Ps. cii. 6 to have been accustomed to haunt desert places or ruins. The 'little owl' is 'by far the most abundant of all the owls of Palestine,' and 'in the tombs or on the ruins, among the desolate heaps which mark the sites of ancient Judah, his low, wailing note is sure to be heard at sunset' (Tristram, NHB. 194 f.). Or perhaps, with Halévy, as the owl hardly 'sings,' the voice of the great owl (נִי for נִי) shall be in the windows, of the raven in the thresholds. The 'great owl' (Lev. xi. 17), also called the 'eagle-owl,' is likewise abundant in ruins (Is. xxxiv. 11 Heb.: NHB. 193). The 'windows' are of course those of the now uninhabited and neglected palaces and temples.

desolation. Read with LXX, Ew., We., &c., the raven (דור for ער): and see Is. xxxiv. 11. The raven also is a bird that loves desolate places, frequenting, for instance, the barren cliffs and shores of the Dead Sea (Tristram, NHB. 201).

the cedar work. With which the walls of her palaces and joyous. Or, exulting (iii. 11). The word used suggests the idea of exuberant joy, unrestrained by any thought of responsibility or care: cf. Is. xxii. 2, xxiii. 7, xxxii. 13; also v. 14.

I am, and there is none beside me. A proud expression of Nineveh's sense of her unique imperial position. The same words, as also the preceding ones, from 'that dwelt carelessly,' are repeated in Is. xlvii. 8 with reference to Babylon, the successor of Nineveh as the imperial city of Western Asia.

iii. 1-7. The prophet here returns to Jerusalem. He describes afresh the sins rampant within her, especially the sins of her ruling classes, princes, judges, prophets, and priests; and blames her, in Yahweh's name, for her refusal to take warning from the example of her neighbours.

1. Ah! she that is defiant and polluted, the oppressing city! For Ah! see on Nah. iii. 1.

rebellious. Better, defiant. Mārāh is to resist contumaciously, and is nearly always used of an obstinate refusal to listen to Yahweh's will (e.g. Dt. i. 26, 43; Is. i. 20; Ps. lxxviii. 8, 17, 40, 56): though commonly rendered 'rebel,' 'rebellious,' it thus corresponds more closely to 'defy,' 'defiant.' (To 'rebel,' both politically (2 K. xxiv. 1), and religiously (Ez. ii. 3), is mārad: mārāh is never used of political rebellion).

polluted, viz. by sins of various kinds. The word is a rare and late one—in Lam. iv. 14, Is. lix. 3, used in particular of pollution by bloodshed.

the oppressing city. Alluding especially to the oppressions and extortions practised by the upper classes upon their less fortunate neighbours: see, for instance, Is. i. 23, v. 8-10, 23, x. 2, Mic. ii. 2, iii. 1-3, Jer. vii. 6, xxii. 3, 13. Ez. xxii. 29 shows, however, that the people generally shared the same faults.

2. Development of the thought of Jerusalem's 'defiance,' v. 1: she would not listen to Yahweh's voice, or be reformed, but turned persistently from Him.

the voice: i. e. the voice of God by the prophets: Jer. vii. 23, xi. 4, 7, and often.

received... correction. A favourite expression of Jeremiah's (Jer. ii. 30, v. 3, xvii. 23, xxxii. 33, xxxv. 13): compare especially vii. 28 'This is the nation that hath not hearkened unto the voice of Yahweh their God, nor received correction.' 'Instruction' (marg.) means moral education: cf. Ps. l. 17; Prov. i. 8, xii. 1, xiii. 1, 18, &c.

she trusted not, &c. Distrusted His promises, disbelieved in His power to help or save (cf. i. 12); and consequently, hoping for nothing from Him, drew not near to Him.

3. The sins of the leading classes particularized in detail. Like the prophets generally (e.g. Am. vi. 1; Is. i. 23, iii. 14; Mic. iii. 1, 9), it is especially the official and responsible classes whose sins and neglect of duty Zephaniah denounces.

Her princes. As in i. 8 (cf. Is. i. 23; Ez. xxii. 27), the nobles, in whose hands lay the judicial and governing power.

roaring lions. Ready at any moment to seize and rend the prey: cf. Prov. xxviii. 15, Ez. xxii. 25.

evening wolves. So Hab. i. 8, where see the note.

The extortion of superior officials, the corruption of justice, and judicial murders, are crying vices in Oriental countries; and the denunciations of the prophets show that they were only too prevalent in ancient Israel as well.

leave nothing till the morning: so voracious are they.

and treacherous persons: her priests have profaned the sanctuary, they have done violence to the law. The LORD in the midst of her is righteous; he will not do iniquity; <sup>a</sup> every morning doth he bring his judgement

But the rendering 'leave' is very doubtful, depending upon a questionable combination with an Arabic and Aramaic verb. That of the marg. (which has the support of Nu. xxiv. 8, Ez. xxiii. 34) implies that all is devoured voraciously over-night; though the words might also be rendered, 'her judges are evening wolves, (which) gnawed not bones in the morning,' and so were doubly hungry and ferocious in the (following) evening.

light. I. e., as often in Old English (e. g. Jud. ix. 4), marked by levity, thoughtless, frivolous. But pōhēē means rather unrestrained, reckless,—in Jud. ix. 4 (see Moore) reckless in action, here reckless in assertion, boastful: the prophets referred to being men eager for notoriety, who, 'instead of being humble declarers of the will of God, sought to give utterance to their own ideas' (Hitz.). Cf. Jer. xxiii. 32, where the cognate subst. recklessness (RV. vain boasting) is also used of the prophets. The delusive promises of the 'false prophets,' who sought by making them to gain popularity, are often alluded to: see e. g. Mic. iii. 11; Jer. xiv. 13 f., xxiii. 16 f., 26 f., xxvii. 9 f., 16, xxviii. 2 ff.

have profaned that which is holy (not 'the sanctuary'), they have done violence to the law. Ez. xxii. 26 is an explanatory parallel: 'Her priests have done violence to my law, and have profaned mine holy things; they have put no difference between the holy and the common [cf. xlv. 23, Lev. x. 10, xx. 25], neither have they caused men to discern between the unclean and the clean [Lev. xi], and they have hid their eyes from my sabbaths, and I am profaned in their midst.' Cf. also Jer. ii. 8, v. 31 [RVm.]. With vv. 4, 5 cf. especially Ez. xxii. 25–28, where rulers [so read for 'prophets' in v. 25, with LXX, and all moderns], priests, princes, and prophets are denounced successively, and the language is often remarkably similar to that used here. 'Law' is here, as always, properly direction (Hab. i. 4).

5. And they do all this, undeterred by the fact that Yahweh is in their midst, giving daily evidence of the righteousness of His rule.

morning by morning. For the thought of morning as the time of judgement, cf. Jer. xxi. 12, Ps. ci. 8. The Hebrew idiom (cf. marg.; and see G.-K. § 123<sup>c</sup>), as Ex. xvi. 21, Is. l. 4, and elsewhere.

that there is no inhabitant. As ii. 5, Is. v. 9, vi. 11, and eight times in Jeremiah.

There is little doubt but that we should read, by a very slight change in one word, with LXX, We., Now., &c. (after 'correction'), and nothing that I have enjoined her will be cut off (=fade) from her sight, i. e. she will continually keep My commandments before her (cf. Ps. xviii. 22).

or imagined. Exactly so Ps. xxxi. 22<sup>b</sup>, Jer. iii. 20 (RV. 'surely'), Is. xlix. 4<sup>b</sup> (each time after I said = I thought), liii. 4 (RV. 'surely').

rose early and corrupted: i. e. corrupted actively and strenuously. This fig. sense of 'rose up' is otherwise found only in Jer., viz. vii. 13, 25, xi. 7, xxv. 3, 4, &c. (in all eleven times), and 2 Ch. xxxvi. 15 (a reminiscence from Jeremiah).

8-13. Let the faithful in Jerusalem, then, wait patiently, until the approaching judgement is completed (v. 8), when the 'remnant of Israel,' freed from all unworthy members, will cleave to God in sincerity of heart, and dwell in safety upon their own land.

8. wait ye (Is. viii. 17, lxiv. 4) for me, . . . for the day when I, &c. The faithful in Israel are addressed, as in ii. 3: they are to wait trustfully for the day when Yahweh's judgement upon the nations (i. 2 f.) is accomplished; for that judgement will sweep away the sinners and oppressors (v. 3) in Israel as well as in other nations, and so will issue in their own deliverance.

to the prey: i. e. for the destruction of the nations. LXX, Syr. read as a witness ('ēd for 'ad), viz. against the nations (not as We., Now.); so Smith, Marti. Cf. for the figure Mic. i. 2; Mal. iii. 5. Halévy would read, 'until the day that I rise up to set in order my judgement, to gather the nations,' &c. (לִּצְרֵךְ for לִּצְרֵי).

to gather, &c. The picture is that of the nations assembled for judgement: cf. Jer. xxv. 31, 33, Is. lxvi. 16, Ez. xxxviii-xxxix, Joel iii. 11-16. Read then, to assemble, &c. (לִּקְבֹּץ for לִקְבֹּץ).

for all the earth, &c. Repeated from i. 18.

9-10. The peoples will then unite harmoniously in the service of Yahweh. The connexion with vv. 1-8 must be admitted to be very imperfect. (1) The terms of v. 8 imply not purification, but destruction: if, however, all the nations are destroyed, how can any remain to be converted? (2) What does 'For' in v. 9 give a reason for? It might give a reason for God's purpose to purge or renovate the nations: but not for His purpose to destroy them (v. 8). Can it, then, give a reason for 'wait ye,' addressed to the pious in Israel, in v. 8 (so Keil)? It can only do this, if the conversion of the Gentiles anticipated in v. 9 be assumed to involve the destruction of evil-doers not only in the nations at large (v. 8), but also in Israel itself (where they afflict and oppress the righteous, v. 3): yet if these links in the argument had been in the prophet's mind, would they not naturally have been expressed by him? Either, if vv. 9-10 are really Zephaniah's, the connexion of thought is imperfect, and we have, perhaps, his discourse in a condensed form, with links in the argument omitted; or the verses are an insertion made by a later hand.

9. turn. Cf. 1 S. x. 9.

a pure lip. 'Lip' may in Heb. stand for 'language' (see e.g. Gen. xi. 1 RVm., Is. xix. 18 Heb.); but it is better to take it here in its literal sense. The 'lips' of the nations are unclean, either from their general sinfulness (Is. vi. 5, cf. 7), or, more particularly, from their taking the names of false gods upon them (Hos. ii. 19, Ps. xvi. 4).

with one consent. Heb. with one shoulder. The metaphor does not occur elsewhere in the O. T., but is found in Syriac.

10. Ethiopia is again, as in ii. 12, taken as a type of a distant nation. The verse has, however, been very differently understood, the Heb. being in parts uncertain or ambiguous. (1) RV. Here 'daughter of my dispersed' is taken as a poetical expression, formed on the analogy of the 'daughter of Jerusalem,' v. 14, 'daughter of Babylon,' Ps. cxxxvii. 8, &c. (meaning the community or people of Zion, Babylon, &c.), and signifying the community of scattered Israelites; and the meaning is that the dispersed people of God would be brought back from their most distant places of banishment (cf. Is. xi. 11, xxvii. 13, &c.), and again bring Him offerings in Jerusalem. (2) RVm. The meaning of this is that the Gentiles would themselves bring back the dispersed Jews as an offering to Yahweh: for the thought in this case, cf. Is. lxvi. 20. As Davidson, however, remarks, the expression 'suppliants' seems then not very natural. (3) The word following 'daughter of' in the expressions mentioned under (1) is, however, elsewhere always,—or (see Mic. iv. 5) nearly always,—the name of a people; the word rendered dispersed is a peculiar one, which does not occur elsewhere; and hence Ewald conjectured 'the daughter of Put' (פוט for פוט), the African people mentioned in Nah. iii. 9 in parallelism with Kush (Ethiopia); the verse would then describe the homage of the heathen, and be parallel in thought to Is. xviii. 7 (cf. also Is. xlv. 14; Ps. lxxii. 10). There the daughter of my dispersed, shall bring mine offering.

11 [Z] In that day shalt thou not be ashamed for all thy doings, wherein thou hast transgressed against me: for then I will take away out of the midst of thee <sup>a</sup>thy is in the context no mention or thought of the restoration of the Jews, so that this last sense is decidedly the most appropriate; but it must remain an open question whether the subject, 'my suppliants (also a doubtful word, not found elsewhere), the daughter of Put,' expressing the heathen nations, really represents the original text of the passage.

the rivers of Ethiopia. So Is. xviii. 1. The Hebrews may have heard of the Blue Nile and the 'Atbara, which join the main stream from the S.E. at about 15° and 18° N., respectively.

bring. The word used means to conduct, lead up; and implies that the offering (or [collectively] offerings) was led or brought up in some state, accompanied by a procession: cf. (likewise of gifts or offerings) Ps. lxviii. 29, lxxvi. 11; Is. xviii. 7.

offering. Or, present, as token of allegiance (1 S. x. 27).

11-13. Then the purified remnant of Israel will cleave faithfully to its God, and trusting in Him will dwell unmolested in their own land. The picture is in designed contrast with the corrupt Jerusalem of the present, vv. 1-7.

11. In that day: i.e. in the general period spoken of in the context (Is. vii. 18, 20, and often); here of the period after the judgement (v. 8), when the prophet pictures the kingdom of God established in Judah.

not be ashamed, &c. Because viz. (Keil) such doings no longer occur, or (Ew., Dav.) because they are so completely passed away as to be no longer remembered. Or (Nowack, Marti), in accordance with a common use of the word, 'shalt thou not be put to shame on account of all thy doings,'—the actual offenders (vv. 3, 7 end) having been all cut off (v. 11<sup>b</sup> 'for then I will take away,' &c.).

for then, &c. Zephaniah adopts here (cf. ii. 7, 9) Isaiah's characteristic doctrine of the purification of Judah by a judgement, sweeping away its unworthy members, and leaving only a righteous 'remnant' to escape, who will then be the founders of a new community, to be established in the future, endowed with the true, or ideal, perfections of the Israel of God (Is. i. 25-27, iv. 3, x. 22, xi. 11, 16, xxviii. 5, xxxvii. 22)<sup>1</sup>.

proudly exulting ones, and thou shalt no more be haughty in my holy mountain. But I will leave in the <sup>12</sup> midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the LORD. The remnant of Israel <sup>13</sup> shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth: for they shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid.

thy proudly exulting ones. The upper classes of Judah, confident in themselves, proud and elated. The same expression is used in Is. xiii. 3 of Yahweh's warriors, the Medes, elated with martial pride.

an afflicted and poor people. Only these survive the judgement, to form the nucleus of the worthier community of the future. The 'remnant' is characterized by the qualities usually found in the pious servants of Yahweh. The godly men of Israel were found, as a rule, not among the nobles or the wealthy, who too often abused their position to defraud or oppress those lower in the social scale than themselves (see e. g. Ps. x. 2, 9), but among those who are described as the 'poor,' the 'needy,' or the 'afflicted' <sup>1</sup>. It is these, accordingly, who enjoy Yahweh's favour and regard: cf., for instance, Ps. xviii. 27, where He is spoken of as saving the 'afflicted people,' but as abasing the 'haughty eyes'; and such passages as Is. xiv. 30, 32, xxv. 4, xxix. 19; Ps. xii. 5, xxxv. 10.

trust. Properly, take refuge in: see on Nah. i. 7.

13. The remnant of Israel. See on v. 11; and cf. ii. 7, 9, Mic. ii. 12, v. 7, 8.

not do unrighteousness. As v. 5.

nor speak lies, &c. 'They will not deceive, or take advantage of one another, or embitter one another's life, but will lead together an idyllic existence of peace and tranquillity, none harming or disturbing another' (Hitz.). Contrast v. 3, and the picture in Jer. ix. 3-5.

feed, &c. Like a flock, grazing and lying down in complete security. For 'feed' and 'lie down' (fig.) cf. Is. xiv. 30, Mic. vii.

<sup>1</sup> Or, the 'humbled.' The word is cognate to that rendered 'humble' in ii. 3; but, while that denotes those who voluntarily humble themselves under the hand of God, this denotes those who are humbled by human oppression, or other adversity. Cf. on Hab. iii. 14; and see, further, the art. 'POOR' in DB.

14 Sing, O daughter of Zion; shout, O Israel; be glad and 15 rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem. The 14-20. Conclusion. In vv. 14-17 the prophet, with his eye fixed on this blissful future, in jubilant tones bids the people rejoice in the restoration of Yahweh's favourable presence in their midst; in vv. 18-20 Yahweh speaks, and promises that those now in exile will be brought back, and assume an honourable position among the nations of the earth.

14. Sing. As Is. xlix. 13, liv. 1. More exactly, Ring out (thy joy): see Cheyne, The Psalms (1888), on Ps. v. 12, or the writer's Parallel Psalter, p. 455.

O daughter of Zion. 'Daughter,' in such expressions, is a poetical personification of the population or community: it is particularly used where it is desired to portray the people as feeling or expressing some keen or vivid emotion: see e.g. Is. x. 30, xxxvii. 22; Jer. vi. 26; Zech. ii. 10, ix. 9.

thy judgements. We., Now., Marti, with a change of points, would render thine opponents (viz. in judgement: see Job ix. 15 Heb. [G.-K. § 55<sup>b</sup>]). But it is perhaps doubtful whether a term having a forensic sense is suitable here to the context (Is. liv. 17 is different).

16. Fear thou not. As Is. xli. 10, 13, 14, and often. The marg. (= AV.) is improbable, and may be neglected.

be slack. Properly, hang down, in want of energy, or terror. The expression is a common one: see e. g. Is. xliii. 7; 2 S. iv. 1, xvii. 2; and (with let not, as here) 2 Ch. xv. 7.

17. The verse repeats and expands the thought of v. 15. Yahweh is not only in Israel's midst: He is there also with His might, as its defender, and His love to it is restored.

rejoice. A strong word, implying full and exuberant joy: of Yahweh, as Dt. xxviii. 63, xxx. 9; Jer. xxxii. 41; Is. lxii. 5, lxv. 19.

be silent in his love. The expression is interpreted to mean a 'silent ecstasy' of love; but such an idea agrees badly with the words following ('with ringing cries': see Cheyne on Ps. v. 12; or the writer's Parallel Psalter, p. 455). Buhl has suggested a slight but very plausible emendation, 'He will renew His love<sup>1</sup>.'

18-20. Promise of restoration to those in exile.

18. The text must be rendered, them that sorrow (Lam. i. 4) away from; or (RVm.) them that are removed (2 S. xx. 13) from: in either case the allusion being to those exiled in foreign lands.

the solemn assembly. Heb. mô'ēd, meaning properly a stated place or time, and applied in particular to the fixed sacred seasons of the Jewish year: see especially Lev. xxiii, which is a calendar of such sacred seasons (RV. set feasts; RVm. appointed seasons): for other references, see Hos. ii. 11; Is. i. 14, xxxiii. 20 (EVV. solemnities); Ez. xlv. 24. In RV. the word is usually to whom the burden upon her was a reproach. Or, better, upon whom [fem., referring to thee, i. e. Jerusalem] reproach was a burden, i. e. upon whom there lay the heavy reproach of national disaster, and the exile of her children. RVm. is just a paraphrase of this rendering. For ‘reproach,’ cf. Isa. liv. 4 ‘the reproach of widowhood’ (i. e. of the time of exile); Ez. xxxvi. 15 (with ‘bear’); Ps. xlv. 13, lxxix. 4. The first RVm. on this verse may be disregarded. The Heb. of the verse is crabbed and strange; and, though it is translatable, it can hardly be brought out in its original form. Halévy would read, ‘I will gather them that are removed from the solemn assembly, they shall be with thee (עִמָּךְ for עִמָּךְ), that thou bear not reproach because of them’ (מִשְׁמַחַת עֲלֵיךְ for מִשְׁמַחַת עֲלֵיךְ). This is plausible, though whether it is the original text is more than we can say.

19. deal with. Cf. in the Heb. Ez. xx. 44, Ps. cix. 21 (in a good sense); and in a bad sense, as here, Ez. xxii. 14<sup>2</sup>. For the thought, cf. Is. li. 23.

<sup>1</sup> ‘Set (or ‘appointed’) feast,’ the English reader should be aware, means in EVV. something quite different from ‘feast.’ ‘Feast’ (hag) denotes a pilgrimage, and there were only three of these in the Jewish year (Ex. xxiii. 14–17): ‘set feast’ (mō’ēd) is a wider term, and denotes any sacred season (Lev. xxiii).

that time will I bring you in, and at that time will I gather you: for I will make you a name and a praise among all the peoples of the earth, when I bring again your captivity before your eyes, saith the LORD.

(in the Heb.) instead of being the antecedent to whose, refers far more naturally back to the persons mentioned before. It is very probable that the last word in the Heb. ('their shame') is not original; and that we should read simply 'and I will make them a praise and a name in all the earth': cf. v. 20 'for I will make you,' &c. Or (Grätz, Halévy) חזרה may have fallen out: 'and I will make them a praise and a name in all the earth in return for their shame': cf. Is. lxi. 7. The two Heb. words, however, drag a little, in this case, at the end of the verse.

20. and at that time will I gather you. A clause such as this suits the context excellently; but it cannot by any possibility be extracted from the existing Heb. text<sup>1</sup> (which is, in fact, untranslatable).

I will make you, &c. Cf. Jer. xxxiii. 9.

when I turn your captivity. As ii. 7.

before your eyes: i. e. so that you will witness and experience it yourselves; it will not be delayed till only your children can take part in it.

INTRODUCTION

HISTORICAL CIRCUMSTANCES OF HAGGAI'S TIME; AND THE OCCASION AND CONTENTS OF HIS PROPHECY.

THE prophecies of Haggai are dated in the second year of Darius Hystaspis (B. C. 520), seventeen years after the return of the Jews from Babylonia in the first year of Cyrus (B. C. 537). Not, of course, that the whole body of exiles availed themselves of the permission granted by the edict of Cyrus (Ezr. i. 1-4) and returned to the home of their fathers. Many had, no doubt, followed the advice given by Jeremiah (Jer. xxix. 5-7) to the first band of exiles, who had gone into captivity with Jehoiachin in 597: they had built houses, planted gardens, and brought up families in Babylonia; they and their children had in many cases grown accustomed to their new home, and not even the inspiring utterances of the Second Isaiah had been sufficient to induce them to leave it. Nevertheless, according to the list in Ezr. ii. 1-70 (=Neh. vii. 6-69, with textual variations), 42,360 Israelites,—or (according to the separate items<sup>1</sup>) 29,818 (in Neh. 31,089) Israelites (including 4,289 priests, 74 Levites, 128 (148) singers, and 139 (138) gate-keepers),—besides 7,337 male and female slaves, and 200 singing men and women, formed the company which returned to Judah in 537. The bulk of the laity were naturally of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, the only two secular tribes left in Palestine after the end of the Northern Kingdom in 722.

The civil head of the restored community was Sheshbazzar (Ezr. i. 8, 11, v. 14, 16), of whom it is disputed whether he is identical with Zerubbabel or not: even, however, if (as most modern scholars hold<sup>1</sup>) he is not, Zerubbabel, the grandson of Jehoiachin, and therefore a prince of David's line, had taken his place as pehāh, or governor, of the Persian province of Judah, and civil head of the Jewish community, before 520, the year in which Haggai and Zechariah began to prophesy (Ezr. v. 1; Hag. i. 1). The ecclesiastical head of the community was Jeshua, or Joshua, grandson of Seraiah, who was chief priest at the time of the destruction of the Temple in 586 (2 K. xxv. 18). The returned exiles settled partly in Jerusalem, partly in a number of towns and villages in the neighbourhood, such as Gibeon, Beth-lehem, Anathoth, Kiriath-jearim, Beth-el, &c. (Ezr. ii. 20 ff.).

The first public act of the restored community was the erection of the altar of burnt-offering upon its old site (Ezr. iii. 3 f.). This statement of the Book of Ezra is confirmed by the contemporary allusion in Hag. ii. 14; but with regard to the date of the foundation of the new Temple, a difficulty arises on account of the conflict of authorities. According to Ezr. iii. 8-13 this ceremony took place in the second year of the return (i.e. in 536); and with this statement agrees the representation of Ezr. iv. 1-5, 24<sup>2</sup>, according to which the enemies of the Jews succeeded in interrupting the rebuilding of the Temple till the second year of Darius (B.C. 520); it is also supported by Ezr. v. 16, where the elders of the Jews, in reply to the letter sent to them in 520 by the Satrap Tattenai, asking what authority they had for building the Temple, after appealing to the permission granted by Cyrus to Sheshbazzar, proceed to state that Sheshbazzar 'laid the foundation of the temple, and since that time even until now it hath been in building, and yet it is not completed.' Of these passages Ezr. iii. 8-13 and iv. 1-5, 24 are plainly the work of the compiler of the Book of Ezra<sup>1</sup>, i. e. of the Chronicler who lived some 250 years after B. C. 536, so that his statements have not the value of contemporary history. On the other hand, a number of mostly contemporary passages seem to imply that the foundation of the new Temple was not laid till the second year of Darius (B. C. 520): thus Hag. i. 4, 9 speaks of the Temple in that year as being still 'waste'; Ezr. v. 2 describes Zerubbabel and Jeshua as 'beginning' to build the house of God, with the encouragement of the prophets (i. e. Haggai and Zechariah; see Ezr. v. 1, vi. 14, as well as Hag. i. 14 f., Zech. iv. 7-9), not in 536 but in 520; Hag. ii. 18 can hardly be naturally understood except as dating its foundation in the same year<sup>2</sup>; and Zech. viii. 9,—written in, or after, Darius's fourth year, 518 (see vii. 1),—appears to state explicitly that its 'foundation was laid' at the same time (viz. when the same prophets were active, two years previously). Upon the strength of these latter passages it was argued by Schrader<sup>3</sup>, Kuenen, and others, that the Chronicler, thinking naturally that the first care of the returned exiles would be to give effect to the permission granted by Cyrus, and begin the work of rebuilding the Temple, ante-dated its foundation by sixteen years, assigning to B. C. 536 what really did not take place till 520. In view of the frequently unhistorical statements and descriptions of the Chronicler, especially where religious ceremonies or institutions are concerned (e. g. in I Ch. xv-xvi and much of xxiii-xxix), there would certainly be nothing intrinsically improbable in such a supposition: but the terms of Ezr. v. 16 seem to be too explicit to admit of it<sup>1</sup>; and so the more probable view appears to be that the foundation was laid originally in 536, but that, as all attempts to carry the work further proved for the time abortive, either the ceremony was actually repeated when the work was resumed in earnest in 520<sup>2</sup>, or at any rate that the twenty-fourth day of the ninth month in 520, when the work was so resumed, was treated as the day on which the foundation of the Temple was really and effectively laid, and Haggai and Zechariah ignored what took place in 536 altogether.

<sup>2</sup> Vv. 6-23 relate both to a different (and later) occasion and to a different subject, viz. not the Temple, but the city-walls: see the Commentaries, or the writer's Introd. to the Lit. of the OT., pp. 514 f. (ed. 7, pp. 547 f.).

<sup>2</sup> In the verse, 'Consider, I pray you, from this day onward: from the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, from the day that the foundation of Yahweh's temple was [or has been] laid, consider it,' the two clauses beginning with 'from' can hardly be anything but parallel, so that the 'day' on which the Temple was founded will be identical with the twenty-fourth day of the ninth month, viz. (see v. 10) in Darius's second year, B. C. 520.

We may, then, picture the foundation-stone of the restored Temple as having been laid formally in 536. No further progress was, however, made for sixteen years. Various causes contributed to this inactivity. The fifty years of captivity had taught the exiles that it was possible to preserve at least the main principles of their religion without Temple or altar. The more zealous party would, no doubt, have made some effort to rebuild the Temple,

<sup>1</sup> Schrader, arguing that if 'that time' in Ezr. v. 16 meant 536 the verse would directly contradict Ezr. iv. 16, concluded that it described what was done by Sheshbazzar in 520. This, however, is hardly likely,—and indeed, if Sheshbazzar be not Zerubbabel, impossible: the statement 'since that time,' &c., must be allowed to be an exaggeration, but it is to be explained, probably, partly by the fact that the work had been nominally in hand since 536, and partly by the evident desire of the elders to satisfy Tattenai that it had not been begun at their own initiative, but that it had the sanction of Cyrus, and was merely the continuation of what had been begun originally by Sheshbazzar sixteen years before (so Stade, Gesch., ii. 123, Meyer, Bertholet, &c.).

and reorganize public worship upon its former footing, had not a series of untoward circumstances stood in the way. The half-caste Samaritans,—descendants partly of foreign colonists, partly of Israelites who had escaped the captivity of the Northern Kingdom (B. C. 722),—had begged to be allowed to help in the work of rebuilding the Temple; but their offer had been refused by the Jews,—partly, no doubt, upon religious grounds, but partly also, it is probable, from a fear of compromising their political independence, and forfeiting the privileges secured to them by the edict of Cyrus, if they formed alliances with their neighbours: and the effect of the refusal was that the Samaritans became the determined foes of the Jews, and, probably by misrepresentations to the local Persian authorities, succeeded in seriously impeding the further progress of the work (Ezr. iv. 1–5, 24<sup>1</sup>). The country was also insecure: according to Zech. viii. 10, before 520 ‘there was no safety to him that went out or came in because of the adversary,’—the reference being probably to raids made by the Samaritans or other neighbours, though troubles arising from the passage of Persian troops through Judah, when Cambyses invaded Egypt in 527, may also be included. Nor was this all. The land had lain neglected for fifty years, and it was a long and laborious task to bring it into proper cultivation again: a succession of bad seasons added to the difficulty; droughts prevailed; the scanty crops were blasted by mildew and beaten down by hail: a few indeed were prosperous enough to dwell in ‘panelled’ houses, but the people generally were impoverished and disappointed (Hag. i. 4, 6, 9–11, ii. 16, 17; cf. Zech. viii. 10). The Second Isaiah had portrayed dazzling visions of the restoration: a triumphal progress of the exiles returning through the desert; noble trees and cooling waters affording them refreshment by the way; Jerusalem resplendent with every glory; the people basking in peace and felicity; the nations of the earth envious of their happiness, and vying with one another in showing them honour and respect (Is. xli. 18 f., xlvi. 20 f., xlix. 10 f., 22 f., lii. 12, liv. 11 f., lv. 12 f., lx, lxi. 5 f., lxv. 17-25). The reality was a bitter disenchantment: the people were disheartened: they concluded that the wrath of God was not yet removed from them (Zech. i. 12), and that 'the time had not yet come for Yahweh's house to be built' (Hag. i. 2).

Meanwhile, important events were taking place in the Persian empire. After the death of Cambyses in 522, the Magian Gaumáta, who pretended to be Cambyses's brother Smerdis, usurped the throne, and held it for seven months. His murder by Darius Hystaspis and six others, and the elevation of Darius to the throne (Hdt. iii. 67-88), was the signal for the outbreak of great disturbances in the Persian empire. As we learn from the Behistun inscription, a series of pretenders arose in different parts of the empire, and many provinces revolted, which had all to be reconquered by Darius. First Susiana rebelled under one Atrina, who styled himself king there; then Babylon under Nidintubel, who claimed to be 'Nebuchadnezzar, son of Nabuna'id,' and who is shown by contract-tablets to have reigned in Babylon from Oct. 521 till Aug. 520, when Darius defeated Nidintubel in front of Babylon, and, entering the city a few days afterwards, put him to death. Whilst he was in Babylon, Darius tells us, the provinces of Persia, Susiana, Media, Assyria, Armenia, Parthia, Margiana, Sattagydia, Sacia all revolted<sup>1</sup>. The revolt in Susiana was soon subdued, but the others were more serious, and were not suppressed without many months of hard fighting<sup>2</sup>. Altogether Darius enumerates (including Gaumáta) nine pretenders, and says that it cost him nineteen battles to put them down. His authority was not finally established in his empire till the spring of 519.

News of these occurrences would naturally reach Jerusalem; and as in the past the prophets had often caught their inspiration from great movements around them, in which they traced the workings of Yahweh's hand, so, it can hardly be doubted, this shaking of nations in the East helped to awaken the spirit of prophecy in Haggai, and determine the direction of his thoughts. It was a shaking which, as he wrote in 520, seemed destined to spread; it seemed destined to embrace other nations, and to be likely before long to issue in that overthrow of heathen powers to which the older prophets had often looked forward as preceding the advent of the Messianic age. It was imperative, therefore, that Yahweh's Temple should be made ready for Him as speedily as possible: when this was done, the people would no longer have cause to complain of bad seasons and other disappointments: Yahweh's blessing would rest upon them (Hag. ii. 19); there would be a 'shaking' both of 'heaven and earth,' and of 'all nations': some would offer willingly of their costliest treasures to beautify the restored Temple; nations unfriendly to Yahweh and His people would be overthrown, and perish by internecine strife: the Messianic age of peace and felicity would thereupon begin in Judah, with an honourable place reserved in it for Zerubbabel (Hag. ii. 7, 9, 21-23). Haggai thus reaffirms the Messianic hope of the older prophets, in a form suggested by, and adapted to, the circumstances of the age in which he lived.

Of course Haggai, in his picture of the future kingdom of God, portrays, like the other prophets, an ideal. As he looks out into the future he idealizes it: he pictures the restored Temple as the religious centre of the world (Is. ii. 2-4), nations coming in pilgrimage to it, delighting to honour it with their gifts, and so making it more glorious even than the Temple of Solomon. The vision has not been fulfilled (cf. p. 180), and of course can now never be fulfilled except in a spiritual sense. All nations may own one religion and one God ; but the one Temple in which, when this consummation has arrived, they will offer their worship and their gifts can obviously be only a spiritual Temple.

Haggai's book consists of four distinct, though related, prophecies, all belonging to the second year of Darius, B.C. 520.

1. Chap. i. On the first day of the sixth month Haggai appeals publicly to the people no longer to postpone the work of rebuilding the Temple : their neglect was not due to want of means, for some, at any rate, had built panelled houses for themselves, and it had been followed by failure of crops and drought, indicative of the Divine displeasure : if they would regain Yahweh's favour, let them fetch timber from the mountains, and begin the work of restoration at once. His words produced such an effect upon those who heard them that, on the 24th of the same month, the people, headed by Zerubbabel, and the high priest Joshua, began the work.

2. Ch. ii. 1-9. On the 21st day of the seventh month the prophet addresses words of encouragement to those who felt disheartened as they gazed upon the ruined remains of Solomon's Temple, and wondered whether they could ever be restored to their former magnificence : the future glory of the Temple, he declares, will exceed its former glory ; for soon a great ' shaking ' of all things will take place ; the Messianic age will be established ; and the Temple will be beautified by the offerings of the Gentiles.

3. Ch. ii. 10-19. On the 24th day of the ninth month, Haggai, in order further to impress upon the people the importance of pressing on with the restoration of the Temple, teaches them, by means of a kind of parable, that so long as it remains unbuilt, a taint of guilt clings to everything that they do, and they cannot expect the unfruitful seasons to come to an end; if, however, they will only continue the good work which they have on this very day begun, they may confidently look forward to receive Yahweh's blessing.

4. Ch. ii. 20-23. An encouragement addressed, on the same day, to Zerubbabel personally, as the representative of the Davidic dynasty, and therefore the object of patriotic hopes. Zerubbabel is assured by the prophet that, in the approaching overthrow of heathen powers, his position will remain unshaken, and he will be made Yahweh's honoured and trusted vice-gerent.

The literary style of Haggai, though not devoid of force, is, comparatively speaking, simple and inornate: he lacks the imagination and poetical power possessed by the prophets generally. But he possesses all the feeling and spirit of a prophet; and his ministry was rewarded with a success which was denied to some of his greater predecessors. Times had changed: and though he had to arouse the people to exertion on God's behalf, he had not, like most of the pre-exilic prophets, to call them to repentance, or to threaten them with judgement for their idolatry and other national sins. 'In his opening message Haggai evinced the first indispensable power of the prophet—to speak to the situation of the moment, and to succeed in getting men to take up the duty at their feet; in another message he announced a great ethical principle<sup>1</sup>; in his last he conserved the Messianic traditions of his religion, and, though disappointed in the personality (Zerubbabel) to whom he looked for their fulfilment, he succeeded in passing on their hope undiminished to future ages' (G. A. Smith, p. 252).

'Darius,' comes, of course, through the Latin, from the Greek form of the name, Δαρείος. Darius Hystaspis (B. c. 522-485) is the Persian king of whom we hear much from Herodotus, and who led the expedition against Greece, which was repulsed by the Athenians at Marathon, B. c. 490.

Darius the king. The order usual in Aramaic, and found as a rule in the post-exilic books of the O. T. In the older books the order, almost without exception, is the king David, the king Solomon, &c.

the sixth month. The month called by the Assyrians and Babylonians Elul (Neh. vi. 15; 1 Macc. xiv. 27), corresponding to our Aug.-Sept.

the son of Shealtiel. Cf. Ezr. iii. 2, 8, v. 2; Neh. xii. 1; Mt. i. 12; Luke iii. 27. Shealtiel was son of Jeconiah (i. e. Jehoiachin), the king of Judah who (2 K. xxiv. 15) was taken captive to Babylon (1 Chr. iii. 17): Zerubbabel was consequently in the direct line of descent from David.

governor of Judah: i. e. governor of the Persian province of Judah. The word pehāh is of Assyrian origin: it occurs constantly in the Ass. and Bab. inscriptions of the 'governor' of a province; and when the Persians succeeded to the empire of the Babylonians the name passed on to them. It often occurs in post-exilic writings in the same sense, as ii. 2, 21, Mal. i. 8, Neh. ii. 7, 9, &c.

Joshua. The first high-priest after the restoration, often mentioned in the Book of Haggai (see i. 12, 14, ii. 2, 4), and Zechariah (iii. vi. 11), called in Ezra (ii. 2, iii. 2 al.) and Nehemiah (xii. 1 al.) Jeshua. He was son of Jehozadak, the high-priest who was taken to Babylon by the Chaldeans (1 Chr. vi. 15), and grandson of the high-priest Seraiah, who was put to death by son of Jehozadak, the high priest, saying, Thus speaketh <sup>a</sup> the LORD of hosts, saying, This people say, <sup>a</sup> It is not the time for us to come, the time for the LORD's house to be built. Then came the word of the LORD by Haggai <sup>3</sup> the prophet, saying, Is it a time for you yourselves to dwell <sup>4</sup> in your cieled houses, while this house lieth waste? Now <sup>5</sup> therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts: <sup>b</sup> Consider your ways. Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, <sup>6</sup>

Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah, after the capture of Jerusalem, B. C. 586 (2 K. xxv. 18-21).

2-6. The prophet, in Yahweh's name, rebukes the people: they have been remiss in making no effort to rebuild the Temple; hence their present distress and want.

2. This people. With a touch of depreciation, as Is. vi. 9, 10, xxviii. 11, 14 al.

The time is not come for Yahweh's house to be built. So we must read, following RVm.: the Hebrew text has a forced and unnatural construction. The people were disheartened: the glowing promises of the Second Isaiah had not been fulfilled; a succession of bad harvests (vv. 6, 11) seemed to indicate that Yahweh's anger still rested upon them. So they argued that the time had not yet arrived for the Temple to be built.

3. The prophet retorts the word they use upon themselves: is it, then, the 'time' for them to live in well-built, panelled houses?

in your cieled houses. More exactly, in your houses, (and that too) panelled. 'Cieled' is here a very misleading archaism (see W. A. Wright's Bible Word-Book, s. v., or Hastings' DB., s. v.): for the word has no reference to what we now call the 'cieeling,' but means panelled: the walls, viz. were wainscotted with costly woodwork (cf. Jer. xxii. 14). 'Cieled' has the same meaning in 2 Chr. iii. 5, Jer. xxii. 14, Ez. xli. 16 (AV. and RV.).

5. Consider. Heb. set your heart on (i. e. give your attention to): so v. 7, ii. 15, 18; also Job i. 8 al.

your ways: i. e. what you have been doing, and what it is leading to, viz. (v. 6) impoverishment and want.

6. The crops are scanty and poor, men are consequently insufficiently nourished, unable to resist the cold, and impoverished.

but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes. Thus saith the LORD of hosts: <sup>a</sup> Consider your ways. Go up to the <sup>b</sup> mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the LORD. Ye looked for much, and, lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did <sup>c</sup>blow upon it. Why? saith the LORD of hosts. Because but ye have not, &c. More exactly, but ye cannot have enough; ye drink, but ye cannot be filled with drink; ye clothe you, but ye cannot get warm.

he that earneth wages, &c. An expressive figure. Earnings quickly disappear: they are small in themselves, and are soon spent in providing the merest necessities of life. Cf. Zech. viii. 10.

7, 8. The people are again bidden to 'consider their ways,' with the view of beginning to do now what they have so long neglected.

8. Go up to the hill country, &c.: i. e. into the mountainous country about Jerusalem, where there must at this time have been woods (cf. Neh. ii. 8, viii. 15). There would probably be almost sufficient stonework remaining from Solomon's Temple; but the woodwork had been burnt, and would have to be replaced.

be glorified: or, glorify myself, viz. by pouring out My blessing upon you, and bringing in the Messianic age.

9-11. The cause of the recent bad harvests and scarcity of food.

9. A double misfortune had fallen upon them. They had expected plentiful harvests, but had had scanty ones; and what they had gathered into the barns, being sickly or blighted, had quickly become spoilt.

blown (or breathed) upon. Either with the collateral idea (cf. RVm.) of blowing away, or (We., Marti), in accordance with a popular superstition, with that of spoiling: cf. the statement of a modern traveller, cited by Marti, 'The Muslims dislike it extremely, when any one breathes on a threshing-floor full of corn; they say that the devil then comes by night, and carries away a part of the harvest.'

Because, &c. The bad seasons, so far from being, as the people thought (v. 2), an indication that the time for building the Temple had not yet arrived, are in fact a sign of Yahweh's displeasure for their slackness in the work, at the same time that they are ready enough to build and adorn their own houses (cf. v. 2).

run . . . to. Fig. for devote themselves eagerly to (cf. 'run to evil,' Pr. i. 16). But perhaps, with a slight change, we should read (We., Now., Marti), take pleasure every man in.

10. for your sake. The Heb. preposition is ambiguous, and might mean either for your sake (cf. Ps. xlv. 22), or over you (cf. Dt. xxviii. 23). In the former case, however, the words are superfluous after Therefore; and in the latter case the point would not have the full force that it has in Dt. xxviii. 23. LXX do not express the words; and it is possible that עַל־כֵּן is due to a faulty repetition of the preceding עַל־כֵּן 'therefore' (so We., Now., Smith, Marti).

is stayed, &c. Read (omitting one letter): hath withheld the dew, and the earth hath withheld her increase (Zech. viii. 12). The Heb. verb is never used intransitively. Even RV. (= AV.) implies the addition of a letter: notice the italic from.

dew. Dew in Palestine is copious, as it is also indispensable for vegetation, during the hot and rainless summers: hence it is often mentioned as a condition of fertility, e. g. Dt. xxxiii. 13, 28, Zech. viii. 12.

wine: rather, must. The Heb. tirōsh appears to have been a comprehensive term, denoting sometimes (cf. Joel ii. 24) the freshly-expressed juice of the grape, sometimes (cf. Jud. ix. 13; Hos. iv. 11) a light kind of wine, such as the ancients often made by checking artificially the fermentation of the juice before it had run its full course (see more fully the note in the writer's Joel and Amos, in the Cambridge Bible, pp. 79 f.). 'Corn, must, and fresh oil' (yizhār) are often mentioned together as the three staple products of the soil of Palestine: e. g. Dt. vii. 13, xi. 14; Hos. ii. 8, 22: for tirōsh cf. also Is. lxii. 8, lxxv. 8; Zech. ix. 17.

forth, and upon men, and upon cattle, and upon all the labour of the hands.

- 12 Then Zerubbabel, the son of Shealtiel, and Joshua the son of Jehozadak, the high priest, with all the remnant of the people, obeyed the voice of the LORD their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, as the LORD their God had sent him; and the people did fear before the LORD.
- 13 Then spake Haggai the LORD's messenger in the LORD's message unto the people, saying, I am with you, saith the
- 14 LORD. And the LORD stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel labour: i.e. labour connected with agriculture; here of the product of labour, as Dt. xxviii. 33, Ps. lxxviii. 46.

'For ourselves, Haggai's appeal to the barren seasons, and poverty of the people, as proof of God's anger with their selfishness, must raise questions. But we have already seen, not only that national calamities were by the ancient world interpreted as the penal instruments of the Deity, but that all through history they have had a wonderful influence on the spirits of men, forcing them to search their own hearts, and to believe that Providence is conducted for other ends than our own physical prosperity' (G. A. Smith, ii. 239 f.; cf. i. 162 f.).

12-15. The effects of Haggai's prophecy. A little more than three weeks afterwards, the people, headed by Zerubbabel and the high-priest Joshua, began the work.

12. the remnant of the people: i.e. those who had returned from Babylon, the 'remnant' of a once more numerous nation. So v. 14, ii. 2; Zech. viii. 6: cf. Is. xlvi. 3.

obeyed. Lit. hearkened to,—which is, of course, the etymological meaning of 'obeyed' (ob-audio). So always.

did fear before Yahweh. Recognizing His hand in the bad seasons that had befallen them, and accepting them as a punishment for their neglect of His house.

13. in Yahweh's message. Rather, by Yahweh's messenger-ship: i.e. in virtue of his being commissioned by Yahweh as His prophet. The word 'messenger' (often in the common sense of the word, and also as = angel) is applied only here to a prophet.

I am with you. A word of encouragement and consolation: ii. 4<sup>b</sup>, Gen. xxviii. 15; Ex. iii. 12; Jos. i. 5; Jer. i. 8, and frequently.

14. stirred up the spirit of . . . So Jer. li. 11; 1 Chr. v. 26; 2 Chr. xxi. 16, xxxvi. 22 (=Ezr. i. 1); Ezr. i. 5.

In the seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of 2 the month, came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying, Speak now to Zerubbabel the son of 2 Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of did work. As 2 K. xii. 11. 'Work' is a substantive. As the actual building seems only to have begun later (see on ii. 15-19), the reference will probably be to the preliminary labour of clearing away rubbish, &c.

ii. 1-9. Those among the people who remembered what the Temple of Solomon was like, before it had been pillaged, and its woodwork burnt, by the Chaldeans (2 K. xxv. 9, 13-17), were no doubt greatly discouraged when they saw its dismantled walls and ruined courts, which had now lain neglected for more than sixty years, and wondered whether it would ever be possible to restore them to their former magnificence: whatever had been done during the past month (i. 15), the Temple in its present condition presented a disheartening spectacle. It was to counteract such despondency that Haggai spoke the words of encouragement contained in ii. 1-9, promising that, in spite of its present unworthy appearance, the later glory of the Temple would transcend its former glory, for the Messianic age is speedily approaching: the ideals of prophecy (e.g. Is. lx) will be shortly fulfilled; and the Temple will be beautified with the wealth of the nations (Is. lx. 5, 7, 13).

The Temple was actually completed four years afterwards, in 516 (Ezr. vi. 15). Its completion 'marks a new stage in religious history. It was the first and most definite step towards the realization of Ezekiel's vision of a holy community having the sanctuary as its visible centre and rallying-point. That Haggai connected the advent of the Messianic age with Zerubbabel is an instance of the inevitable limitations of prophecy. But he at least succeeded (G. A. Smith, ii. 252) in "asserting the Messianic hope of Israel, always baffled, never quenched, in this reopening of her life"' (Ottley, Religion of Israel, 1905, p. 128).

3. Who is left, &c. Solomon's Temple was burnt by the Chaldaeans sixty-six years before (B. C. 586); so that none but a few very aged men could have remembered it.

as nothing: i. e. in comparison with what it was in its glory, when it was not only panelled on its inner walls with cedar, and decorated with carvings, but also,—even though there may be some exaggeration in the descriptions<sup>1</sup>,—in many parts overlaid with gold.

4. be strong: i. e. be of good courage, as 2 S. x. 12 al. (Heb.).

for I am with you, Cf. i. 13,

5. The Hebrew is highly anomalous: 'the word' is preceded by the mark of the accusative, and there is no verb to govern it; the insertion of 'according to' in AV., RV. is utterly ungrammatical. If we understand 'Remember' (RVm.; cf. Zech. vii. 7), the reference will be to Yahweh's promise or covenant that, if Israel would be obedient to His voice, He would make it His possession out of all peoples (Ex. xix. 5; cf. Jer. xi. 3-5). But to understand 'Remember' is more than is possible. It seems that we must, with We., Now., Smith, Marti, follow the LXX, which does not express the first clause of v. 5 at all, reading (v. 4<sup>b</sup>) 'for I am with you, saith Yahweh of hosts, and my spirit abideth in your midst: fear ye not.' This yields an excellent sense, in agreement with the context: the omitted words, on the contrary, introduce a thought foreign to their context, and are apparently a gloss, intended to remind the reader of the covenant made with Israel at the Exodus, as forming the basis of all Yahweh's subsequent relations with His people.

and my spirit <sup>2</sup>abode among you: fear ye not. For 6 thus saith the LORD of hosts: Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and abode. RVm. abideth is much preferable. It is the presence of Yahweh's spirit in Israel now (Zech. iv. 6), not in the past (Is. lxiii. 11), to which Haggai appeals.

6-9. The promise itself, giving the grounds of the encouragement expressed in vv. 4, 5. In the first two years of Darius' reign (522-520) his empire was in a disturbed state; many important provinces revolted under pretenders, and were with difficulty reduced to submission (see p. 150); and as in the past movements among the nations, or approaching political crises, taken in conjunction with their bearing upon Israel, had often given the impulse to prophecy, and determined the form and imagery of prophetic utterances, so now Haggai throws his prophetic thought into a form suggested by the circumstances of his time: he announces the signs that are to precede the advent of the ideal kingdom of God: nations will be shaken, and earthly kingdoms overthrown (cf. especially ii. 21-23); and then, as God's kingdom is established upon Zion, the peoples of the earth will vie with one another in bringing their costliest offerings to beautify His Temple (cf. Is. lx. 5-7, 11).

6. a little while. The future, as often in prophecy, is foreshortened. Isaiah, for example, anticipated the ideal kingdom of God as being established immediately after the overthrow of Sennacherib (Is. xi. 1-10, cf. x. 33 f.; xxxii. 1-8, cf. xxxi. 8-9); the Second Isaiah represents the ideal future as beginning immediately after the people's return from Babylon (e. g. Is. lx. lxi. 4-9); and here Haggai similarly pictures the Gentiles as coming to do homage at Jerusalem within 'a little while.' Cf. ii. 20-23, where Zerubbabel is assigned a place in the Messianic kingdom.

I will shake, &c. As ii. 21-3 shows, political convulsions are what the prophet has primarily in view; but he pictures them here as accompanied by earthquake, and other physical manifestations (cf. Is. xiii. 10, 13, as accompanying the fall of Babylon; Ez. xxxii. 7 f.).

This verse is quoted (partly) in Heb. xii. 26 f. The apostle finds an emphasis in the expression Yet once, implying the finality of the 'shaking' referred to by the prophet; and he interprets the passage as signifying 'the removal of the things that are being shaken, as of things that have been made' (i. e. of the earthly and transitory Jewish dispensation, then, as he wrote, on the point of passing away), 'that those things which are not shaken may remain' (i. e. the spiritual or Christian order of things, spoken of in the next verse as a 'kingdom which cannot be shaken,' which he and those whom he is addressing have received).

- <sup>a</sup> Or, the things desired (Heb. desire) of all nations shall come

7. The effects of this 'shaking' upon the nations.

the desirable things of all nations shall come, &c.: i. e. their costly treasures will be brought to beautify the Temple (cf. v. 8). The thought is exactly the same as that of Is. lx. 5, where, speaking of the Temple to be built in the restored city, the prophet says, 'The abundance of the sea shall be turned unto thee, the wealth of the nations shall come unto thee' (cf. also vv. 6, 7 [RVm.], 11, 13). For the word rendered desirable (i. e. precious) things, cf. another derivative of the same root rendered 'precious' in 2 Chr. xx. 25, Dan. xi. 43. And for Zion, as the future spiritual metropolis of the world, cf. Is. ii. 2-4, Zech. viii. 21 f, xiv. 16.

The passage is, of course, 'Messianic' in the broader sense of the term; but the old rendering (Vulg. et veniet desideratus cunctis gentibus: AV. and the desire of all nations shall come), according to which it had specifically a personal reference, and spoke of the coming of the Messiah, is impossible upon grammatical grounds: the verb 'shall come' is in the Hebrew plural, showing that the subject hemdath, though in form a fem. sing., is really a collective term, and denotes 'desirable things': see in the Heb. exactly similar constructions in Jud. ix. 55, xv. 10; Is. xvi. 4; Ps. ix. 7, &c., and as here, with a fem. subject, Is. xxvi. 19; Ps. cxix. 103 (cf. G.-K. § 145<sup>c,d</sup>). The LXX already render correctly καὶ ἥξει τὰ ἐκλεκτὰ πάντων τῶν ἐθνῶν.

I will fill this house with glory. It is tempting to think (with some older commentators and Wellh.) of 1 K. viii. 10 f., and to refer the words to the glory of the Divine presence; but the context (v. 8, as well as v. 7<sup>a</sup>) rather strongly supports the view that the 'glory' pictured by the prophet is that which will accrue to it from the offerings of the nations (cf. Is. lx. 5-7, 13).

8. The silver is mine, &c. The 'wealth of the nations' is Mine; and they will offer to Me of it willingly and abundantly.

9. The latter glory of this house: as the walls built by Solomon were probably, at least in part, still standing, the 'house,' or Temple, of which they were to form part, is regarded as one and the same as the previous one; cf. the same expression in v. 3. The latter glory of the Temple will be greater even than the

than the former, saith the LORD of hosts: and in this place will I give peace, saith the LORD of hosts.

In the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in 10 the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying, Thus saith the LORD of 11 hosts: Ask now the priests concerning the law, saying, If 12 one bear holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any

will I give peace. The final blessing. Though the nations may be in commotion (vv. 6<sup>b</sup>, 7<sup>a</sup>), Jerusalem will enjoy God-given peace (cf. Is. lx. 18). Between this prophecy and the next (vv. 10-19), spoken two months afterwards, falls chronologically Zech. i. 1-6 (in the eighth month of Darius' second year).

10-19. Haggai here adopts another means of encouraging the people to proceed with the work of rebuilding the Temple, by pointing to the consequences which their remissness in the past had brought upon them, and promising that henceforth the blessing of Yahweh should rest upon them. On the 24th of the ninth month—three months after work had begun on the site of the Temple (i. 14 f.), and two months after the last prophecy (ii. 1-9)—by means of replies elicited from the priests on two points of ceremonial observance, he teaches the people that, so long as the Temple remains unbuilt, they are as men that are unclean; their offerings are unacceptable; and hence the late unfruitful seasons. From the present day, however, the day on which the foundation of the Temple was laid, Yahweh promises to bless them.

11. Render: Ask, now, direction of the priests. The Heb. tôrah (from hôrâh, to point out, direct, teach) means oral direction given by the priests to the laity, in accordance with a traditional body of principles and usages, on (principally) points of ceremonial duty: in process of time the term came further to denote a body of technical direction (or 'law') on a given subject (e.g. on leprosy, Lev. xiv. 2, 32, 54, 57), and finally to denote 'the law,' as a whole. Cf. Jer. xviii. 18 'direction will not perish from his mouth'; Ez. xlv. 23 (cf. Lev. x. 10, xi. 47) 'They shall direct my people (so as to discern) between the holy and the common, and make them to know (the difference) between the unclean and the clean'; Dt. xxiv. 8; and see further the art. 'Law' in DB. (iii. 65).

12. holy flesh. The flesh of a sacrifice, which is sacred, as belonging to Yahweh: so Jer. xi. 15 (RVm.).

meat, shall it become holy? And the priests answered 13 and said, No. Then said Haggai, If one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean?
 And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean.
 14 Then answered Haggai and said, So is this people, and so is this nation before me, saith the LORD; and so is every work of their hands; and that which they offer 15 there is unclean. And now, I pray you, consider from meat. Rather, food: see on Hab. i. 16.

shall. We should now say, will. So v. 13 (twice).

13. unclean by a dead body. Ceremonially 'unclean,' through contact with, or even proximity to, a corpse (Nu. xix).

it will be unclean. See Nu. xix. 22.

What was ceremonially 'holy' hallowed what it touched, but not more (Lev. vi. 27); what was ceremonially 'unclean' infected not only the person in contact with it, but whatever he touched as well (Nu. xix. 22): uncleanness had thus a greater infectious power than holiness. The application follows in v. 14.

14. So it is with the people: 'The faint aroma of sanctity, coming from their altar and sacrifices, was too indirect and feeble to affect and pervade the secular atmosphere of their life and circumstances—just as holy flesh carried in the lap will not sanctify what the lap touches; while, on the other hand, the work-a-day worldliness of their minds and life infected everything connected with them, defiling even their religious actions—just as one unclean from touching a corpse defiles even the holiest things when he comes near them' (Davidson, The Exile and Restoration, p. 82). The lesson is, Less worldliness, more holiness, more thought for God and His Temple.

there. A contemptuous reference to the provisional altar, which had been erected immediately after the return from Babylon (Ezr. iii. 3).

15-19. Let the people lay to heart their remissness in making no effort to rebuild the Temple during the seventeen years which had passed since their return from Babylon: a succession of infertile seasons had been the consequence of their neglect; only now, when they have seriously girded themselves to the work, can God promise them His blessing. This is clearly the general sense of the passage; but parts of it are difficult, and have been very differently understood. To the present writer the best rendering appears to be that of Nowack, which has been accepted by Wellh., in his third edition (1898), in preference to the one which he had adopted previously<sup>1</sup>; and also by G. A. Cooke ('Haggai' in DB. ii. 280<sup>b</sup> n.), and Marti. It will probably conduce to clearness if the rendering of RV. (which is also that of Keil) is first explained, and then that of Nowack given as a whole, explanations of details being added afterwards.

(1) Explanation of RV.: Consider from this day and backwards, back from before one stone was laid upon another in the Temple (i.e. back from before the building of the Temple was resumed, three months ago, i. 14 f.); (v. 16 f.) during all this time there were bad seasons: (v. 18) consider from to-day and backwards, [beginning now at the other end] since the day when (sixteen years ago, Ezr. iii. 10) the foundation of the Temple was laid: (v. 19) Is the seed [which has been gathered] still in the barn? [No: the scanty produce has all been consumed,] yea, the vine, &c., have not brought forth (on account of the bad seasons): from this day (now that the work of rebuilding the Temple has begun in earnest) I will bless you.

Here (a) the day on which the foundation of the Temple was laid is taken to have been in the year after the return, sixteen years previously; (b) the interpretation of 'upward' as backwards is questionable; (c) in v. 18 the rendering 'since' (lit. 'from') implies a forced exegesis; the sudden transition from the end to the beginning of the sixteen years is awkward, and the same sense would have been more naturally expressed by 'from the day that the foundation of the Temple was laid until to-day, consider it' (cf. G. A. Smith, p. 248).

(2) As rendered by Nowack (except in one or two minor points): <sup>15</sup> And now, I pray you, consider from to-day and onwards! <sup>a</sup> Heb. since those days were.

Here the day on which the foundation of the Temple was laid is taken to be the day on which Haggai is speaking. The other variations from the sense expressed by RV. will be apparent from the translation: see also the following notes, and p. 170.

15. this day. The day on which the prophet is speaking, the 24th of the ninth month (Chislev [Zech. vii. 1] = Nov.-Dec.).

and upward. This is the crucial word in the interpretation of the passage. Everywhere else the expression means 'and onwards' (1 S. xvi. 13, xxx. 25; and in the formula, 'from [twenty] years old and upwards,' i.e. and onwards, Nu. i. 3, and often); and it is very doubtful whether, here and v. 18, it can be rightly understood in the opposite sense of backwards. Nowack understands the expression in the sense that we should expect it to have from the analogy of its other occurrences.

16. In consequence of the poor crops, both harvest and vintage had yielded much less than had been expected.

through all that time. Heb. since they were,—an incredible expression for 'through all that time.' The text is beyond question corrupt: the emendation of Matthes, how did ye fare? (lit. 'what did ye become?'), suggested by the LXX (τίδες ἦτε), and adopted by Nowack, implies merely מהו אתם for מהיו אתם.

twenty measures. Read with LXX (σάρα) twenty seahs; the same word is also supplied by Rashi and Kimchi. The 'sē'ah' was the third of an ephah, and equal to about 2½ gallons: it is often in EVV. concealed under the colourless 'measure' (Gen. xviii. 6; 1 S. xxv. 18; 1 K. xviii. 32; 2 K. vii. 1; Mt. xiii. 33 [σάρον]).

winefat. 'Fat' is here an archaism for vat (Germ. fass, Icel. fat, A.-S. fæt), as elsewhere in EVV., viz. Joel ii. 24, iii. 13, Is. lxii. 2, Prov. iii. 10 RV., Is. v. 2 RVm., Mark xii. 1 AV., Hos. ix. 2 AVm. (cf. Antony and Cleop. ii. 7, 22, cited by Aldis Wright, Bible Word-Book, s.v. Fat). The 'wine-vat' was the receptacle in which the juice, trodden out by the feet of men in the 'wine-press,' was collected. Both were commonly cavities hewn out in the rock (cf. Is. v. 2) at different levels, the upper one, the gath or the wine-press, having the larger superficial area, the lower one, the yekeb or wine-vat, the greater depth; the juice expressed in the gath flowed down into the yekeb through a connecting channel. Many remains of ancient wine-presses and wine-vats have been found in Palestine: see Rob. BR. iii. 137 (here the gath was 8 ft. square and 15 inches deep, the yekeb draw out fifty vessels, there were but twenty. I smote 17 you with blasting and with mildew and with hail in all to draw out. Rather, to bale out,—the word meaning to scoop or ladle off from the top; cf. Is. xxx. 14 'a potsherd . . . to bale out water from a cistern.' Indeed, this would be the only way in which a cavity sunk in the rock could be emptied.

fifty vessels. Heb. 'fifty pūrāhs' or trough-fulls,—'pūrāh' meaning a wine-trough, and being in Is. lxiii. 3 a syn. of the 'wine-press,' and so, it is supposed, signifying here the measure of juice which was generally obtained from one filling of the press with grapes. But the expression is rather strange; and perhaps, supposing a letter to have fallen out, we should read, with We. (and AV.!) 'to draw off fifty (scahs) from the wine trough,'—'pūrāh' being here in this case a synonym of the 'wine-vat.'

blasting: i. e. the blasting of the sirocco (cf. Gen. xli. 6, where the 'east wind,'—as indeed always in the OT.,—means the sirocco<sup>1</sup>), a hot and scorching wind which in Palestine is apt to blow up with great suddenness and violence from the desert, withering and burning the growing corn so that no animal will touch it, and described by travellers as striking the face like a blast from a furnace.

and with hail, (even) all the work of your hands: i. e. your undertakings, especially your agricultural enterprises (cf. Dt. xvi. 15, xxviii. 12). For the destructive effects of hail, cf. Ex. ix. 25, 26, Ps. lxxviii. 47.

yet were ye not towards me: i. e. were not disposed towards me (2 K. vi. 11, Hos. iii. 3, Ez. xxxvi. 9 'I am towards you'). The Heb. here is peculiar: it is varied from 'yet ye returned not unto me' in Am. iv. 9 (also vv. 6, 8, 10, 11), just referred to. It is best explained philologically by Wellh. The correction ולא שבחם is violent.

20-23. Conclusion. A second prophecy, delivered on the same day as the last, and addressed specially to Zerubbabel, in which the prophet develops further the thoughts expressed by him two months previously (ii. 6 f.; see ii. 1); and promises Zerubbabel that on the approaching overthrow of the powers of the world, which is to inaugurate the Messianic age, his position will remain secure, and Yahweh will constitute him His trusted representative. The thought of the approaching downfall of the powers opposed to Israel appears also in Zechariah (see i. 15, 21, ii. 9, vi. 8): for the honour and distinction vouchsafed to Zerubbabel, see also Zech. iv. 7-10, and cf. on Zech. vi. 13.

21. governor of Judah. See on i. 1.

I will shake (Heb. am shaking) the heavens and the earth. As ii. 6. The participle, of the imminent future, as Nah. ii. 2.

22. The political aspect of the approaching crisis is developed here more fully and distinctly than in ii. 6 f.

throw the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the nations; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother. In that day, saith the <sup>23</sup> LORD of hosts, will I take thee, O Zerubbabel, my servant, the son of Shealtiel, saith the LORD, and will make thee as a signet: for I have chosen thee, saith the LORD of hosts.

come down: i. e. be struck down. Cf. Is. xxxiv. 7; Jer. xlviii. 15, l. 27 (where 'come down' has the same meaning); Zech. xi. ~~read~~.

every one, &c. They will fall by one another's hands,—either through a panic seizing them or through quarrels breaking out among them. Cf. Jud. vii. 22; Ez. xxxviii. 21; Zech. xiv. 13.

23. The promise to Zerubbabel: Yahweh will make him His signet-ring, inseparable from Himself, and the symbol of His authority.

as a signet. The signet in the ancient East was a mark of honour and distinction, and was given by a monarch to an important minister, as a mark of confidence and authority (cf. Gen. xli. 42; Est. iii. 10). For the figure, as here used, cf. Jer. xxii. 24; and observe that the honourable position from which it is there said that Yahweh would degrade Jehoiachin is here conferred by Haggai upon his grandson (see on i. 1), Zerubbabel. The Messianic aspirations which attached formerly to the Davidic king are transferred by Haggai to Zerubbabel, who becomes, in virtue of the position thus assigned to him, a type of Christ.

I have chosen thee: viz. to be the Messianic ruler of the future: cf. Zech. vi. 9-13, with the notes.

chosen. As Saul or David, for instance, had been 'chosen' in the past, 1 S. x. 24, 1 K. viii. 16, xi. 34 al.

It is no doubt strange to find the date specified in a prophecy delivered on the very day itself; and hence it is possible that the words 'from the four and twentieth day of the ninth month' in this verse are a gloss derived from v. 10. Wellh., Nowack, and Marti go further, and reject the following clause, 'since the day' &c., as well, regarding it also as a gloss, based upon an incorrect explanation of v. 15. But for this view there are no sufficient grounds: if the clause be omitted, not only is no date mentioned for the foundation of the Temple, but the stress laid upon 'this day' in vv. 15, 18, 19, as marking a change in Yahweh's attitude towards the people (v. 19<sup>b</sup>), remains unaccounted for.

ZECHARIAH I-VIII

INTRODUCTION

ZECHARIAH, son of Berechiah, and grandson of Iddo, of priestly descent (Neh. xii. 4, 16), prophesied, according to i. 1-7, and vii. 1, in the second and fourth years of Darius Hystaspis (B. C. 520 and 518). He was thus a contemporary of Haggai; and he is unquestionably identical with the Zechariah, son of Iddo, who is named in Ezr. v. 1, vi. 14 as co-operating with Haggai in his efforts to induce the people to prosecute the work of rebuilding the Temple.

The historical situation in 520 B. C. has been sufficiently described in the Introduction to Haggai. To recapitulate briefly what was there stated in greater detail: in the first year of Cyrus, B. C. 537, a large body of exiles returned from Babylon to Judah; they settled down in their old homes, but, partly from the difficulty of bringing the land again into cultivation, partly from a succession of bad seasons, and partly from troubles arising from their neighbours, the people fell into a state of apathy and despondency; and though the work of rebuilding the new Temple had been begun formally in 536, nothing further had been done to it till Haggai, two months before Zechariah's opening prophecy (i. 1-6), succeeded in stirring up the people to resume the work (Hag. i. 14, 15). A month later, Haggai had allayed the doubts of those who questioned whether the new Temple would ever be comparable to the old with the promise that the latter glory of the house should exceed its former glory, on account, viz., of the treasures which the nations would offer for its adornment (Hag. ii. 1-9). In the following month Zechariah begins to prophesy.

Zechariah's prophecies fall into three clearly-defined parts, which may be headed respectively: (1) A call to repentance (i. 1-6); (2) Visions of hope and encouragement for Judah (i. 7-vi. 15); (3) Yahweh's promises and demands for the future (chs. vii-viii).

I. i. 1-6 (eighth month of Darius' second year). A call to repentance, as the first condition of the return of Yahweh's favour, which the people thought had for ever left them.

II. i. 7-vi. 15 (three months later, and two months after Hag. ii. 10-23). Visions of hope and encouragement for Judah (i. 7-vi. 8), with a closely related historical appendix (vi. 9-15). This forms the central and most characteristic part of Zechariah's prophecy. The visions all centre upon the great questions of the day: what were the prospects of Judah for the future? how did she stand towards her heathen neighbours? would the Temple ever be finished? They form a well-arranged whole, showing how Yahweh's promises to His people will be fulfilled, and how the various obstacles, whether from without or within, which seem destined to thwart them, will one after another be removed. The answers given to these questions are not mere temporal promises: they all contain a large ideal or 'Messianic' element, which differs from the corresponding element in previous prophets only in being determined by, and accommodated to, the historical conditions of the time.

The first vision (i. 7-17). Yahweh's Four Horsemen. Yahweh's horsemen, who act as scouts or patrols, report that the earth is at rest: there is no sign of any movement among the nations, such as Haggai, a few months before (ii. 6 f., 21 f.), had declared would within 'a little while' bring in the Messianic age: but Yahweh assures the prophet that He is still, as of old, jealous for His people, and ere long Jerusalem and the cities of Judah will be rebuilt, and His people again be prosperous.

The second vision (i. 18-21). The Four Horns and the Four Smiths. Four horns, symbolizing the nations opposed to Israel, have their power broken by four smiths.

The third vision (ii. 1-5). The Man with the Measuring-Line. The new Jerusalem is to have no walls; for its population is to be free to spread far and wide, and Yahweh will be its sufficient defence. In a lyric epilogue, attached to the vision (ii. 6-13), the prophet calls upon the Jews still in Babylon to hasten and return; for Yahweh is about to take up His abode in Zion, and many peoples will join themselves to Him.

The fourth vision (ch. iii). The High-Priest, Joshua, and the Satan. The calamities which continued to beset the people seemed to them an indication that there was still some sin clinging to them, which was an obstacle to their complete restoration to Yahweh's favour, and the advent of the promised future. By the vision of the high-priest, Joshua, representing the people, accused by the Satan, but acquitted, and clothed in clean garments, it is shown that this sin is done away with; and a promise is added of the speedy advent of the Messiah, and of the consummation of national felicity.

The fifth vision (ch. iv). The Seven-Branched Candlestick, and the Two Olive-Trees. Whatever the candlestick may be taken to signify (see the notes), this vision shows that the community presided over by Zerubbabel and Joshua is ever under the watchful care of Yahweh's eyes; and that Zerubbabel, in spite of difficulties, will successfully complete the building of the Temple.

The sixth vision (v. 1-4). The Flying Roll. The land to be purged of sinners. A roll, inscribed with curses, flies over the Holy Land, as a token that in future the curse for sin will never fail to light upon the sinner.

The seventh vision (v. 5-11). The Woman in the Barrel. The land to be purged of sin. Israel's sin, personified as a woman, is carried off in a barrel, and deposited in Babylonia, where for the future it is to remain.

The eighth vision (vi. 1-8). The Four Chariots. Four chariots, drawn by variously-coloured horses, go forth to execute God's judgements upon the heathen, in different parts of the earth, especially in Babylonia.

vi. 9-15. Historical Appendix. A crown to be made of the gold and silver which some of the exiles had sent as an offering to the Temple, and placed on the head of Zerubbabel<sup>1</sup>, who is to complete the building of the Temple; and be the Messianic ruler of the future, with Joshua as priest at his side.

III. Chs. vii-viii (two years afterwards, in Darius' fourth year, B. C. 518). Yahweh's promises, and moral demands, for the future. Zechariah, in answer to an inquiry addressed to him (vii. 1-3), declares that Yahweh demands no fasts, but only the observance of His moral commands, which their forefathers, to their cost, had neglected (vii. 4-14). And he ends his Book with a decalogue of promises (ch. viii), describing the happy days in store for Judah, if only it will satisfy Yahweh's moral demands.

The most characteristic feature of Zechariah's prophecies are the visions. The vision was a frequent mode of prophetic intuition in Israel (cf. Hos. xii. 10; Am. vii-ix; Is. vi; Jer. i; xxiv); but, in the prophecies which we still possess, it is most fully represented in the Books of Ezekiel and Zechariah. The vision is a projection or creation of the mind, analogous to the dream: the subject falls into a state of trance, or ecstasy, in which the channels connecting the brain with external objects are closed; the power of the will to guide thought is relaxed: on the other hand, the imagination, or faculty of combining images and ideas, which have been previously apprehended, into new forms, is abnormally active; and the pictures created by it stand out the more vividly, in the absence of the sharper impressions produced in a waking state of the senses. Psychologically the vision may thus be described as a combination into new forms, under the influence of some determining impulse, of the images and impressions with which the mind, through its waking experience, is stored. In a prophetic vision the determining impulse will have been due to the operation of the revealing Spirit: Zechariah, we may suppose, had been brooding over the condition and prospects of his people: the restoration of God's favour, the triumph over the heathen, the completion of the Temple, to be followed immediately by the advent of the Messianic age, the position to be taken in it by Joshua and Zerubbabel, and the felicity and sinlessness which would then be the nation's lot – these and kindred subjects had been long in his mind: he had, perhaps, thought of some of them in connexion with the same figures and imagery with which they appear associated in the visions; and the visions exhibit the shape which they ultimately took in his imagination. How some of the same subjects are treated by him without the concomitants of a vision may be seen in vi. 9–15, and in chs. vii–viii: the predominant ideas are still clearly the same.

It remains, however, a question whether in the case of Zechariah, whose visions in some cases are much more circumstantial than those of the earlier prophets, we have throughout the narration of actual visions, and not rather (G. A. Smith, p. 274) ‘a series of conscious and artistic allegories—the deliberate translation into a carefully constructed symbolism of the Divine truths with which the prophet was entrusted by his God.’ At least in part, the visions may well be not more than literary forms. And if we ask further why a man ‘with such gifts of direct speech, such a keen desire to stir the public conscience’ (see i. 2–6, vii–viii), and ‘such clear views of his people’s character and history,’ should choose to express the latter by an imagery so artificial and involved, we may perhaps answer with the same writer that this, if partly a result of the natural bent of the prophet’s mind, was partly also a result of the circumstances of his time: ‘the exiles were not responsible citizens or statesmen, but dreamers. They were inspired by mighty hopes for the future, and not fettered by the practical necessities of a definite historical situation upon which these hopes had to be immediately realized.’ They consequently gave the reins to their imagination, and threw the truths which they were inspired to discern into symbolic pictures carefully elaborated in all their details.

A standing feature in Zechariah’s visions is the presence in them of angels. In the visions of the earlier prophets

(Am. vii-ix; Jer. i, xxiv) angels do not appear; whatever is said or done, Yahweh Himself is the speaker or doer; the only exceptions being 1 K. xxii. 19 ff., and Is. vi, where, in the representation of Yahweh's celestial court, angelic beings are naturally present. But in Ezekiel's visions angels, there regularly called 'men,' are a frequent feature: some execute Yahweh's judgement upon Jerusalem (Ez. ix. 1-x. 6); and another, in Ezekiel's vision of the restored Temple (Ez. xl-xlviii), conducts the prophet through the different parts, measures them, and explains the details to him (Ez. xl. 3, 4, 5, &c.). In Zechariah's visions angels are a constant feature: Zechariah never sees Yahweh, or is spoken to by Him directly. And so in his book we have the 'man that talked with me,' the interpreting angel who explains the visions to the prophet (i. 13, 14, 19, ii. 3, iv. 1, 4, 5, v. [2, 3,] 10, vi. 4), and we have besides the 'man' riding the red horse in i. 8, 'another angel' in ii. 3, and 'Yahweh's angel' himself in i. 11, 12, iii. 1, 2 [see note], 3, 5, 6. This predominance of angels in the visions of Ezekiel and Zechariah is due, probably, to a changed conception of the method by which Yahweh operated in the world. The earlier prophets had such a vivid sense of Yahweh's personal and practical interest in the affairs of His people that they were conscious of no need for the intermediate agency of angels: but with Ezekiel there arose an increased sense of the loftiness of God, and of the distance separating Him from earth; and so in Zech. iii, for instance, when Joshua and the Satan appear before the Divine tribunal, judgement is given by 'the angel of Yahweh,' who, as in the older historical books, 'though distinct from Yahweh, yet represents Him so directly and fully that when he speaks or acts Yahweh Himself is felt to speak or act'<sup>1</sup>: elsewhere, if the material details of a vision have to be explained, this is done by a 'man,' i. e. by an angelic being, acting on Yahweh's behalf,

Of Zechariah's eight visions, three, the first two (i. 7-17, 18-21) and the last (vi. 1-8), deal with the relation of Israel to the heathen world without. In his method of dealing with this relation we observe a further difference between Zechariah and the older prophets. The older prophets,—Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, and Jeremiah, for instance,—have always in view the actual nations, the Assyrians or the Chaldeans, as the case may be, who are threatening Israel at the time when they are writing: Zechariah, developing a line of treatment which had begun with Zephaniah and Ezekiel (chs. xxxviii-xxxix), deals with heathen powers in the abstract: their overthrow is predicted; but what powers are intended, and by what historical movements they are to be destroyed, does not appear: the prophet employs indefinite symbolical or apocalyptic representations,—angelic horsemen patrolling the earth in i. 8-11, 'horns' and 'smiths' in i. 18-21, and 'chariots' carrying God's wrath into different quarters of the earth in vi. 1-8. This, again, is a peculiarity connected with the same absence of a definite political situation remarked upon above. It was necessary to assure the people that Israel, and the kingdom of God which it represented, would not succumb before the powers of the world: but there being no dangers actually threatening it, Zechariah conveys this assurance through symbolical representations of the means employed by God for its protection. In the peculiar character of their symbolism the visions of Zechariah prepare the way for the symbolical representations of the later Apocalypses, Daniel, Enoch, 2 Esdras, &c.

The remaining five visions (chaps. ii-v) deal with the future of Israel itself as a nation. Zechariah, as we have seen, was of priestly descent; and this no doubt accounts to a certain extent for the prominence which the Temple, and the high-priest, assume in his outlook into the future. But the completion of the Temple was the pressing question of the day: Ezekiel had seen in vision (x. 18 f., xi. 23), shortly before the destruction of Jerusalem, Yahweh leave the Temple; he had afterwards (chaps. xl ff.) made elaborate provision for its restoration, and had also in vision seen Yahweh solemnly re-enter it (xliii. 4, 5). Without a Temple God could not dwell in the midst of His people, and the national restoration was incomplete. Haggai and Zechariah both urged upon the people the duty of hastening on the restoration of the Temple. To its completion they attached, as other prophets had done to the great coming events of their day, ideal hopes. Isaiah, for instance, had pictured the golden reign of righteousness and peace as beginning immediately after the downfall of the Assyrian (cf. on Hag. ii. 6); and so Zechariah, idealizing similarly the approaching future, pictures the completion of the Temple as inaugurating the same ideal age, when Judah and its inhabitants, with Yahweh again dwelling in their midst (ii. 10-12), will be prosperous and happy (ii. 4, 5, iii. 10), no longer assailed by foes (ii. 8, 9, and elsewhere), purged of sinners (v. 1-4), and sin (iii. 9, v. 5-11; cf. Is. i. 26, iv. 3, xxix. 20-24, xxxiii. 24), ruled by their ideal king,—whom Zechariah, as can scarcely be doubted (see on iii. 8, vi. 11), conceives as represented by Zerubbabel,—with Joshua as priest at his side (vi. 13), maintaining faithfully the ritual observances of the Temple (iii. 7), and when 'many nations' (as Isaiah also had foretold, ii. 2, 3, and elsewhere) will press forward, eager to share the same spiritual privileges, and 'join themselves' to Yahweh (ii. 11). Many of the same thoughts of Israel's felicity, in the coming Messianic age, recur in chap. viii (vv. 3-8, 12-13, 15; also, vv. 20-3, the adhesion of foreign nations). Like Isaiah, Zechariah was disappointed: the completion of the Temple was not followed by an age of ideal happiness and goodness : nevertheless, his visions remain as ideals of the goal designed by God for man, and of the goal to which, we may hope, human history is, if slowly, advancing. The Messianic expectations attached to Zerubbabel were naturally fulfilled, in a larger sense, by Christ. Zechariah was not, like the older prophets, called upon to rebuke : he nowhere, for instance, refers to idolatry : his task was to reassure and encourage his people at a time when despondency and depression had taken possession of them (p. 150). Nevertheless he opens his prophecy with a call to repentance (i. 2-6) ; and in chs. vii and viii he appears as a true heir of the older prophets, insisting upon the moral demands of righteousness and mercy which Yahweh made of His people, and which, he declares, are the condition upon which alone His bright promises for the future can be fulfilled. Zechariah thus teaches, more distinctly, perhaps, than any other prophet, how only man's co-operation, responding to the promptings of the Spirit of God, can ever bring in the golden age upon earth.

ZECHARIAH

- 1 IN the eighth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD unto Zechariah the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo, the prophet, saying, The LORD hath been sore displeased with your fathers. 3 Therefore say thou unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts: Return unto me, saith the LORD of hosts, and 4 I will return unto you, saith the LORD of hosts. Be ye not as your fathers, unto whom the former prophets cried,

son of Iddo. See Neh. xii. 4, 16, from which it appears that Zechariah was of a priestly family (cf. p. 179).

PART I (i. 2-6).

A call to repentance.

2-6. A call to repentance, as the condition of the return of Yahweh's favour. The call is founded upon the experience of the past: the pre-exilic Israelites had turned a deaf ear to the warnings of the prophets, and Yahweh's judgements had overtaken them: let those whom the prophet now addresses take a lesson from their example.

2. with your fathers: who, viz. (v. 4), turned not at my rebuke: if, therefore (v. 3), you wish me to deal differently with you, act yourselves differently from them; return unto me, and I will return unto you.

3. Return, &c. This is what had been taught in substance by many previous prophets (e.g. Hos. xiv. 2-4; Is. i. 19; Jer. iii. 12-15, xxix. 12-14); but the form occurs here for the first time. Cf. Mal. iii. 7; 2 Chr. xxx. 6; also Jas. iv. 8.

4. the former prophets: i. e. the pre-exilic prophets; cf. vii. 7, 12. As Wellh. has remarked, the expression shows how deeply the Jews of the restoration felt the gulf which separated them from pre-exilic Israel.

saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Return ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doings: but they did not hear, nor hearken unto me, saith the LORD. Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they 5 live for ever? But my words and my statutes, which I 6 commanded my servants the prophets, did they not overtake your fathers? and they turned and said, Like as the LORD of hosts thought to do unto us, according to our ways, and according to our doings, so hath he dealt with us.

Upon the four and twentieth day of the eleventh 7

Return ye, &c. Into these words Zechariah casts the quintessence of the teaching of the pre-exilic prophets: man's repentance is the condition of God's assistance. The phraseology is modelled upon that of Jeremiah: see esp. Jer. xxv. 5; cf. also xviii. 11, xxiii. 22<sup>b</sup>, xxxv. 15.

now: the enclitic 'now' (נָּ), better rendered, I pray you.

nor attended unto me. Cf. Jer. vi. 10, 17, 19, xviii. 18 (Heb.).

5, 6. An objection met. The people are supposed to argue that the fathers are long dead, and what have the former prophets to do with the present generation? Zechariah replies: It is true, your fathers and the prophets belong to the past; but (v. 6) not so my words: your fathers were obliged to own that they were fulfilled in their case; and unless you repent, they will be fulfilled again in yours.

5. where are they? The word 'they' is emphatic.

6. my statutes, &c. Rather, my decrees (viz. of judgement) with which I commissioned, &c.

my servants the prophets. So first in Am. iii. 7; most frequently in Jeremiah (six times), and the compiler of Kings (five times).

overtake. Cf. Dt. xxviii. 15, 45.

PART II (i. 7—vi. 15).

Visions of hope and encouragement for Judah.

7-17. Zechariah's first vision. Yahweh's Four Horsemen. On the circumstances in which the people now found themselves, and month, which is the month Shebat, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD unto Zechariah the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo, the prophet, 8 saying, I saw in the night, and behold a man riding upon a red horse, and he stood among the myrtle trees that were in the <sup>a</sup> bottom; and behind him there were

the direction which they may be supposed to have given to the prophet's thoughts and feelings, which formed, no doubt, the human occasion of these visions, see the Introduction, p. 176f.

The object of the first vision is to show how, in spite of appearances to the contrary, God's anger with His people is at an end, and that ere long they will be in possession of every prosperity. The prophet finds himself in imagination in one of the myrtle-covered glens near Jerusalem: he sees what is in appearance a body of horsemen,—a reflection, perhaps, of the military bands and patrols of the Persians. The leader of the party is in front, the others are behind. It soon appears, however, that they are not in reality Persians; they are angelic beings, scouts of God, who have come in from patrolling the earth, bringing their reports with them. The whole earth, they declare, is at rest: there is no sign of any movement upon it, such as Haggai, only a few months before, had foretold was in 'a little while' to overthrow the powers of the heathen (Hag. ii. 6, 7, 20-22), and bring in for Israel the Messianic age. The angel who is speaking with the prophet thereupon inquires how much longer Jerusalem is to rest under the Divine displeasure, and is assured in reply that Yahweh's wrath now at last is turned to pity: Jerusalem and the Temple will ere long be rebuilt, and the prosperity of His people will be no longer delayed.

7. the four and twentieth day, &c. Three months since Zechariah had come forward with his call to repentance (i. 1-6), and exactly two months since Haggai's encouraging prophecies, ii. 18-19, 20-23.

in the bottom. The word is used elsewhere only of the 'deep' of the sea (Ps. cvii. 24 al.); and its applicability to a valley-bottom is very doubtful. The rend. of RVm., shady place (cf. LXX τῶν κατασκιῶν), or glen, implying the least possible change in the vocalization, is preferable.

horses, red, sorrel, and white. Then said I, O my lord, 9 what are these? And the angel that talked with me said unto me, I will shew thee what these be. And the man 10 that stood among the myrtle trees answered and said, These are they whom the LORD hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth. And they answered the 11 angel of the LORD that stood among the myrtle trees, and said, We have walked to and fro through the earth, and, behold, all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest. Then the angel of the LORD answered and said, O LORD 12

sorrel: i.e. yellowish-red. The reason why the horses are mentioned, rather than their riders, appears to be because some significance is regarded as attaching to their colours; though what this significance is, is not explained, and is by no means self-evident. Most probably the colours stand in some relation to the quarters of the earth which the horsemen are supposed to have been severally patrolling (cf. vi. 2, 3, 6): the supposition (Keil) that they have a reference to the mission which they had to discharge is not supported by the context: all bring back the same report (the case of Rev. vi. 2, 4, 8, is obviously different).

9. O my lord, what are these? The words are addressed to the interpreting angel, of whose presence in the vision we are first made aware by this question and the following answer.

the angel that talked with me. The title by which the angel who explains to Zechariah what he beholds is distinguished throughout the visions (i. 13, 14, 19, ii. 3, iv. 1, 4, 5, v. 10, vi. 4).

I will shew thee (lit. 'make thee see'). He does not say, I will tell thee, but I will shew thee, i.e. thou wilt see directly what they are.

10. And the man that stood, &c. The rider on the front horse mentioned in v. 8 here interposes, and explains that the horsemen are the scouts whom Yahweh has sent out to patrol the earth, and report what is taking place upon it.

to walk to and fro: i.e. to patrol (cf. Job i. 7).

11. Hereupon the horsemen speak themselves, and report to Yahweh's angel—who also, it now appears, as well as the rider of vv. 8, 10, stood among the myrtle-trees—that nothing is stirring in the whole earth; there is no sign of any movement bringing in for Israel the Messianic age. Zechariah did not attach to the commotions in the Persian empire (p. 150) the same significance that Haggai appears to have done.

12. Taking the text as it stands (see note on v. 13), Yahweh's of hosts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation these threescore and ten years?

 13 And the LORD answered the angel that talked with me

angel, though from one point of view representing Yahweh (v. 11), is from another point of view independent of Him, and represents the feelings of Zechariah and his countrymen, who could not but be disappointed at the answer given by the horsemen in v. 11; accordingly he makes intercession on behalf of Israel, and asks Yahweh why, though seventy years have passed (B.C. 586-520), His anger,—as was popularly inferred at the time (see p. 150) to be the case,—still rested upon Judah and Jerusalem. In this intercession of Yahweh's angel on Israel's behalf we may, perhaps, see the beginning of the doctrine of patron angels, representing particular peoples, which meets us later in a more developed form in the Book of Daniel (Dan. x. 21, xii. 1).

answered. The word does not necessarily mean 'replied to a question'; it may mean, as it does in v. 11, 'spoke in a manner corresponding to a particular situation, or the feelings called forth by it': cf. for instance, Job iii. 2; Is. xiv. 10; Dan. iii. 14, iv. 19.

not have mercy. Better, have no compassion,—the word used in Is. xiv. 1, xlix. 13; Ps. cii. 13.

13. Yahweh Himself now intervenes, and 'answers' the interpreting angel with comforting assurances. Under what form Yahweh appeared in the vision is not indicated by Zechariah, any more than it is by Amos in Am. vii. 1-9, viii. 1-3, ix. 1: He is introduced abruptly, just as the interpreting angel is in v. 9, and 'Yahweh's angel' in v. 11<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> The explanation of this vision given above (which is that of Keil) appears to the present writer to be the most satisfactory and consistent: but it must be allowed that the description, in some of its details, is not very distinctly expressed; and some commentators have identified the 'angel of Yahweh that stood among the myrtle trees' of v. 11 with the 'man riding the red horse,' and also 'standing among the myrtle trees,' of vv. 8, 10 (so e.g. T. T. Perowne), and (understanding 'answered' in v. 13 in its strict sense) the 'angel of Yahweh' in v. 12 with the 'angel that talked with me' of vv. 9, 13. This interpretation certainly imparts clearness into the description; but it can scarcely be the intention of the text as it stands. Accordingly We., Now., Marti, who adopt it, suppose the text to have been altered, and confused, in consequence of a misunderstanding, and correct it so as to make it express it distinctly; thus they read in v. 8 'a man standing among' &c. (so already with good words, even comfortable words. So the angel <sup>14</sup> that talked with me said unto me, Cry thou, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts: I am jealous for Jerusalem and for Zion with a great jealousy. And I am <sup>15</sup> very sore displeased with the nations that are at ease: for I was but a little displeased, and they <sup>a</sup> helped forward the affliction. Therefore thus saith the LORD: <sup>16</sup>

good words: i. e. gracious words, promises of prosperity: cf. Josh. xxiii. 14; Jer. xxix. 10.

I am jealous. 'I have been and still am jealous' is what the Heb. tense used implies. Yahweh's 'jealousy' for His people (cf. viii. 2) prompts Him now at last to interpose on its behalf: cf. Ez. xxxvi. 5, 6, xxxviii. 19; Is. xlii. 13, lix. 17.

15. But Yahweh is sore displeased with the nations; for they had done more evil to Israel than they were commissioned to do: He was angry (relatively) but a little with Israel, but they had helped unto evil, i. e. had helped, not simply as His instruments for the correction of Israel, but for evil (Jer. xlv. 11), or calamity, seeking to exterminate Israel. 'The fall of the Chaldeans had effected nothing; the Persians were no better than the Chaldeans; the power of the heathen had yet to be broken before the Messianic kingdom could be realized. The Jews were evidently in despair, because, even after their return to Palestine, things still went on quietly in their old way' (We.).

16, 17. Now, therefore, Yahweh's anger against His people is turned into compassion: the Temple and city will be rebuilt, and His people will again enjoy prosperity.

16. am returned, &c. Cf. Is. lii. 8<sup>b</sup>.

Ewald), and 'before' for 'behind,' they omit v. 10 as an incorrect gloss, anticipating v. 11, and they read in v. 11 'the man' for 'the angel of Yahweh,' and in v. 12 'the angel that talked with me' for 'the angel of Yahweh.' These corrections are, however, violent; and the indistinctness in the representation may, after all, be original.

I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies; my house shall be built in it, saith the LORD of hosts, and a line

my house shall be built in it. The rebuilding of the Temple, in which Yahweh might again, as of old, take up His abode (cf. ii. 10), would be the final proof that the period of His wrath was at an end, and that He again viewed His people with favour. Cf. the solemn departure of Yahweh from His Temple, as seen in Ezekiel's vision, Ez. x. 18 f., xi. 23, and His re-entry into it, Ez. xliii. 4, 5.

shall yet overflow (Pr. v. 16) with prosperity. The marg. of RV. is to be followed.

shall yet comfort Zion. Cf. Is. li. 3, lii. 9<sup>b</sup>. LXX, however, has have compassion on (רחם for רחם), which suits the context better (see v. 12). Cf. Is. xiv. 1, of which 'shall yet choose' is in any case a reminiscence; also xlix. 13<sup>b</sup>, Jer xxx. 18 al.

18-21. The second vision. The Four Horns and the Four Smiths. The prophet sees four horns, towering up, we may suppose perhaps, out of the distant darkness, with threatening mien, which he is told are the powers that have scattered Judah. Thereupon four smiths appear, who, he learns, are to strike down and disable the horns of the nations. The vision symbolizes the destruction of the heathen powers which had oppressed Israel, and threatened now to frustrate the fulfilment of the promises given in v. 16. The four horns point to the four quarters of the heavens (cf. ii. 6, vi. 2-6), and represent consequently Israel's enemies in every direction, or the heathen world at large. The hostility shown towards Israel by its more immediate neighbours is here generalized, and becomes an antagonism between Israel and the world at large (comp., later, Dan. ii and vii).

horns. And I said unto the angel that talked with me, 19 What be these? And he answered me, 'These are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem. And the LORD shewed me four smiths. Then said I, 20, 21 What come these to do? And he spake, saying, 'These are the horns which scattered Judah, so that no man did lift up his head: but these are come to fray them, to cast down the horns of the nations, which lifted up their horn against the land of Judah to scatter it.

19. scattered. The expression is not applicable to a 'horn,' as such; but the prophet is thinking of the powers or peoples which the horns represent.

Judah, (even) Israel and Jerusalem. So the text must be rendered, the last three words being epexegetical. But they look very much like an explanatory gloss (cf. 'Judah' alone, v. 21).

20. shewed me. In the vision: as Am. vii. 1, 4, 7, viii. 1; Jer. xxiv. 1.

so that, &c. Read probably so that it lifted not up its head (אשר for ראש: cf., for the Hebrew, Mal. ii. 9).

to fray them. An archaism for to make them afraid (so, for the same Heb., Zeph. iii. 13 al.),—'afraid' being just the passive participle of to 'af-fray.' Better (as 'afraid' is now a weaker word in English than it was formerly), to affright (or disturb) them. In using the word Zechariah is thinking, as in the case of 'scattered,' not of the 'horns' (which could not be 'affrighted'), but of the peoples which the horns represent.

ii. 1-5. The third vision. The Man with the Measuring Line. A man with a measuring-line goes forth to lay out the site of the restored city; but he is interrupted by the interpreting angel: the new Jerusalem is to have no walls, for its population will be free to spread far and wide; and Yahweh will be its sufficient defence.

2 man with a measuring line in his hand. Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what 3 is the length thereof. And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out 4 to meet him, and said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall <sup>a</sup> be inhabited as villages without walls, by reason of the multitude of men 5 and cattle therein. For I, saith the LORD, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and I will be the glory in

2. what is, &c. Rather, what should be; for Jerusalem was still only partially built.

3. went forth: viz. from beside me. But probably we should read, with LXX (εἰσῆκει), stood still (cf. iii. 5 end),—‘went forth’ being a lapsus calami, occasioned by the following ‘went out’ (the Hebrew for both expressions being the same).

went out. Better, came forth, viz. from some other part of the field of vision.

4. and said. Rather, and he said, the subject being, most probably, the interpreting angel, who remains always beside the prophet, and is not likely to have been sent on a message elsewhere (v. 4).

this young man. The man with the measuring-line,—the expression being, perhaps, used as implying one liable to act without consideration (1 K. iii. 7). The man with the measuring-line is to be stopped in his attempt to define the limits of the new city: Jerusalem will be too populous to admit of walls, and too secure, under Yahweh’s protection (v. 5), to need them.

as villages without walls. Lit. ‘as open-country-districts,’ as opposed to walled cities: cf. Ez. xxxviii. 11 (‘a land of open-country-districts,’ || ‘dwelling without walls’); also 1 S. vi. 18, Dt. iii. 5 (see on Hab. iii. 14). The idea of the expansion of Jerusalem in the ideal future as Is. xxxiii. 17, xlix. 19, 20, liv. 2.

5. For the thought of Yahweh surrounding Jerusalem with His protection, cf.,—though the figures are different,—Is. xxxiii. 21, xxvi. 1, lx. 18<sup>b</sup>.

and a glory will I be, &c. Cf. Is. lx. 1, 2; Ez. xliii. 2, 4, 5.

6-13. A lyric epilogue, attached to the vision, in which the prophet (1) in jubilant tones, recalling parts of 11 Isaiah, bids the Jews still in exile escape from the judgement about to break upon the heathen, and return to Palestine, vv. 6-9; and (2) calls upon Zion to exult, because Yahweh is about to take up again His abode in Jerusalem, and many nations will join themselves to Him, vv. 10-13.

the land of the north. An expression used vaguely, especially in Jeremiah (iii. 18, xxiii. 8 al.), of the land of Israel's exile, and understood, it seems, as including even Babylonia. Cf. on Zeph. ii. 13.

for I have spread you abroad, &c. The passage is difficult. (1) As rendered in RV., have spread abroad will naturally mean 'have scattered you' (see the same Hebrew in Ps. lxviii. 14, Ez. xvii. 21): in this case, however, 'as the four winds of heaven' agrees badly with 'the land of the north' from which alone Israel has just been bidden to return (see also v. 7 'Babylon'). (2) Hitzig, Keil, Wright, therefore, understand the words as a promise of future extension, the perfect being the prophetic perfect = 'I will spread you abroad'; but the thought of the restored Jews being spread abroad 'as the four winds of heaven,' i. e. generally over the earth, does not harmonize with v. 12, which implies that they are to be confined to Judah. (3) LXX has 'for I will gather you from the four winds of heaven': this yields the best sense; and, in spite of the not very easy corruption of קוצר to פורש, which it presupposes, is probably to be preferred (so We., Now., Marti).

the four winds of the heaven. A late expression: vi. 5; Jer. xlix. 36; Dan. viii. 8, xi. 4.

7. Zion: i. e. the population of Zion; here, of such parts of it as were still in exile. However, We., Now., G. A. Smith, render more probably (with LXX), Ho, escape unto Zion: for the order of words in the Heb. in this case, cf. Josh. ii. 16; 1 S. v. 8; 1 K. ii. 26; Jer. ii. 10; Is. xxiii. 12.

escape. For a judgement is impending over the heathen world (v. 9; i. 21): cf. Is. xlv. 20; Jer. l. 8, 10, li. 6, 45.

thou that dwellest with. In the Heb. 'inhabitant of,' the term denoting the community, as often (e. g. Jer. x. 17; Mic. i. 11, 12: see RVm.). The 'daughter of Babylon' is a personification of the population of Babylon (on Zeph. iii. 14); but the entire

8 Babylon. For thus saith the LORD of hosts: <sup>a</sup> After glory hath he sent me unto the nations which spoiled you: for he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his expression, as here used, is peculiar; and probably בַּת ('daughter') is simply a dittograph, and we should render, 'Ho, escape unto Zion, thou inhabitress of Babylon' (i. e. the Jewish community still resident in Babylon).
9 eye. For, behold, I will shake mine hand over them,

8, 9. A very difficult passage, though the general sense is plain: let the exiles still in Babylon hasten to quit it (v. 7), because (v. 9) it is God's purpose to execute judgement upon the nations who have spoiled them. As the text stands, the speaker must be the angel of v. 3<sup>b</sup>, who was told by the interpreting angel to give the promises contained in vv. 4<sup>b</sup>, 5; and he must say that he had been sent against the nations which had spoiled Israel after glory, i. e. either to win glory or success in his mission (Hitz., Ew.), or (Keil) to gain glory or honour (as the cognate verb is also rendered, Ex. xiv. 4, 17, 18) over the heathen, by executing God's judgement upon them (cf. Ez. xxviii. 22, xxxix. 13). There is, however, nothing to suggest that the angel is the speaker here, especially as a new paragraph appears to begin with v. 6; and that the speaker in 'hath sent me' is the prophet is strongly supported by v. 9 end, compared with v. 11<sup>b</sup>, iv. 9<sup>b</sup>, and vi. 15. Hence We., Now., G. A. Smith, Marti, suppose that the words 'after glory he hath sent me' are either out of place, or parenthetical; and render, 'For thus saith Yahweh of hosts—(after glory hath he sent me)—unto (or concerning) the nations that spoil you (for he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye), that, behold, I will swing my hand over them,' &c. This yields a more probable general sense: the objection to it is that the appearance here of the words after glory hath he sent me is unexplained: why should either the prophet himself, or, if the words are a gloss, another on his behalf, thus strangely express his hope of success in his mission?<sup>1</sup>

8. toucheth the apple of his eye: i. e. touches what is most precious to Him, and most carefully guarded: cf. Dt. xxxii. 10 (where Israel is said to be 'kept' by Yahweh 'as the apple of his eye'); Ps. xvii. 8.

9. shake. Better, swing: see Is. xi. 15, xix. 16; cf. x. 32.

<sup>1</sup> RVm. (= AV.) means 'After the glory promised in v. 5 has come upon Israel'; but there is no art. in the Heb. to show that there is any reference to v. 5, nor is the sense thus obtained probable in itself.

and they shall be a spoil to those that served them : and ye shall know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me. Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion : for, lo, I come, 10 and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the LORD. And many nations shall join themselves to the LORD in 11 that day, and shall be my people : and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto thee. And the LORD shall 12 inherit Judah as his portion in the holy land, and shall yet choose Jerusalem. Be silent, all flesh, before the 13 LORD : for he is waked up out of his holy habitation.

and they shall be a spoil, &c. The tables will be turned ; and now the nations will become a spoil to Israel. Cf. Is. xiv. 2<sup>b</sup>, li. 22<sup>a</sup>, 23<sup>a</sup>, Ez. xxxix. 10<sup>b</sup>.

The expression, as in the priestly narrative of the Pent., with reference to the Tabernacle (Ex. xxv. 8, xxix. 45, 46 ; cf. also 1 K. vi. 13) : in the future which the prophet here contemplates the ideal relation of Yahweh to His people will be established (cf. Ez. xliii. 9).

11. Many nations will moreover join themselves (Is. xiv. 1<sup>b</sup> ; Jer. l. 4) to Yahweh, and become His people (cf. viii. 22). A reaffirmation of older prophecies of the future adhesion of heathen nations to the religion of Israel : e. g. Is. ii. 3, xviii. 7, xix. 18-25 ; Jer. xvi. 19.

111. The fourth vision. The High-Priest, Joshua, and the Satan. Joshua, the high-priest, appears, standing before Yahweh, clothed in filthy garments, symbolizing the iniquities of the people: the Satan, essaying to accuse him, is rebuked; his filthy garments are removed from him, and his iniquities are taken away (vv. 1-5). After this he is given rule over the Temple, with the right of priestly access to Yahweh, and receives a promise of the advent of the Messiah, the forgiveness of the people's sin, and the restoration of national felicity (vv. 6-10).

The disappointments and vexations of the restoration (p. 149) were felt keenly by the returned exiles, and seemed to them to be an indication that Yahweh was still angry with His people (i. 12 ff.), on account viz. of the idolatries and other iniquities of their forefathers, the guilt of which still rested upon them, and was brought to remembrance against them before God. In the present dramatically conceived vision, these disturbing thoughts are set at rest. It is emphatically taught that no impediment exists in God's eyes to Israel's complete restoration: the Satan, who is pictured as the accuser, is silenced; whatever guilt still attaches to Israel is removed by Yahweh's free grace.

1. And he shewed me. As i. 20.

standing before Yahweh's angel: viz. in a forensic sense, as his judge (Dt. xix. 17; Rom. xiv. 10; Rev. xx. 12).

the Satan. The word 'Satan' means opposer; and denotes one who sets himself to oppose or thwart another in his purpose (Nu. xxii. 22, 32; 2 S. xix. 22; 1 K. v. 4, xi. 14, 23, 25: EVV. 'adversary'), or claims, sometimes with the collateral idea, of accusing maliciously or falsely (Ps. cix. 6; cf. the cognate verb vv. 4. 20, 29, Zech. iii. 1 end). It appears further in the OT. as the name of a specific angel, 'the Opposer,' whose part it is to oppose men in their pretensions to a right standing with God, and to test their sincerity (Job i-ii), to prompt them to do acts which will bring them into disfavour with God (1 Chr. xxi. 1), and, as here, to remind God, in no friendly spirit, of their sins. The Satan does not appear in the OT., as in the NT., as definitely tempting to sin. The word always in the OT., except in 1 Chr. xxi. 1, has the article, and was therefore felt distinctly to mean 'the Opposer.' In LXX it is represented by διάβολος, the 'false accuser,' from the collateral idea referred to above. See further to be his adversary. In the Heb. one word, the verb cognate with 'Satan' (see the last note but one), and meaning to oppose, especially with false or malicious accusations (Ps. xxxviii. 20, lxxi. 13, cix. 4, 20, 29).

2. And Yahweh said. As the sequel shows, 'Yahweh' must here mean 'Yahweh's angel,' even if it be not a textual error for it (We., Now., Marti). Joshua is the people's spiritual representative; and in opposing him before Yahweh the Satan is in effect opposing, or maliciously accusing, the people, with the object viz. of showing that they had not yet been punished as much as their sins deserved. But he is silenced by Yahweh's angel: Yahweh, he is reminded, has chosen Jerusalem (1 K. viii. 44, xi. 13, &c.; cf. ch. i. 17, ii. 12); and was it necessary to persecute still further a 'brand plucked out of the fire'?

a brand plucked out of the fire: i.e. already greatly burnt, and only just saved from complete destruction. Nearly the same expression occurs in Am. iv. 11.

3. with filthy garments. Symbolizing the iniquity of the people. For 'filth' (צוֹמֵא) as fig. of sin, cf. Is. iv. 4, Pr. xxx. 12; and for the figure of the garment, Rev. iii. 4, 5, vii. 14, xix. 8.

stood before. As v. 1, in a forensic sense.

4. Symbolical removal of Joshua's (i. e. the people's) iniquities. he: i. e. the angel. 'Answered,' as i. 12.

Here the day on which the foundation of the Temple was laid is taken to be the day on which Haggai is speaking. The other variations from the sense expressed by RV. will be apparent from the translation: see also the following notes, and p. 170.

15. this day. The day on which the prophet is speaking, the 24th of the ninth month (Chislev [Zech. vii. 1] = Nov.-Dec.).

and upward. This is the crucial word in the interpretation of the passage. Everywhere else the expression means 'and onwards' (1 S. xvi. 13, xxx. 25; and in the formula, 'from [twenty] years old and upwards,' i. e. and onwards, Nu. i. 3, and often); and it is very doubtful whether, here and v. 18, it can be rightly understood in the opposite sense of backwards. Nowack understands the expression in the sense that we should expect it to have from the analogy of its other occurrences.

through all that time. Heb. since they were,—an incredible expression for 'through all that time.' The text is beyond question corrupt: the emendation of Matthes, how did ye fare? (lit. 'what did ye become?'), suggested by the LXX (τίες ἦτε;), and adopted by Nowack, implies merely מיהותם for מה דיהותם.

twenty measures. Read with LXX (σάρα) twenty seahs; the same word is also supplied by Rashi and Kimchi. The 'sē'āh' was the third of an ephah, and equal to about 2½ gallons: it is often in EVV. concealed under the colourless 'measure' (Gen. xviii. 6; 1 S. xxv. 18; 1 K. xviii. 32; 2 K. vii. 1; Mt. xiii. 33 [σάρον]).

winefat. 'Fat' is here an archaism for vat (Germ. fass, Icel. fat, A.-S. fæt), as elsewhere in EVV., viz. Joel ii. 24, iii. 13, Is. lxii. 2, Prov. iii. 10 RV., Is. v. 2 RVm., Mark xii. 1 AV., Hos. ix. 2 AVm. (cf. Antony and Cleop. ii. 7, 22, cited by Aldis Wright, Bible Word-Book, s.v. Fat). The 'wine-vat' was the receptacle in which the juice, trodden out by the feet of men in the 'wine-press,' was collected. Both were commonly cavities hewn out in the rock (cf. Is. v. 2) at different levels, the upper one, the gath or the wine-press, having the larger superficial area, the lower one, the yekeb or wine-vat, the greater depth; the juice expressed in the gath flowed down into the yekeb through a connecting channel. Many remains of ancient wine-presses and wine-vats have been found in Palestine: see Rob. BR. iii. 137 (here the gath was 8 ft. square and 15 inches deep, the yekeb draw out fifty vessels, there were but twenty. I smote 17 you with blasting and with mildew and with hail in all the work of your hands; yet ye turned not to me, saith the LORD. Consider, I pray you, from this day and to draw out. Rather, to bale out,—the word meaning to scoop or ladle off from the top; cf. Is. xxx. 14 'a potsherd . . . to bale out water from a cistern.' Indeed, this would be the only way in which a cavity sunk in the rock could be emptied.

fifty vessels. Heb. 'fifty pūrāhs' or trough-fulls,—'pūrāh' meaning a wine-trough, and being in Is. lxiii. 3 a syn. of the 'wine-press,' and so, it is supposed, signifying here the measure of juice which was generally obtained from one filling of the press with grapes. But the expression is rather strange; and perhaps, supposing a letter to have fallen out, we should read, with We. (and AV.!) 'to draw off fifty (seahs) from the wine trough,'—'pūrāh' being here in this case a synonym of the 'wine-vat.'

blasting: i. e. the blasting of the sirocco (cf. Gen. xli. 6, where the 'east wind,'—as indeed always in the OT.,—means the sirocco<sup>1</sup>), a hot and scorching wind which in Palestine is apt to blow up with great suddenness and violence from the desert, withering and burning the growing corn so that no animal will touch it, and described by travellers as striking the face like a blast from a furnace.

and with hail, (even) all the work of your hands: i. e. your undertakings, especially your agricultural enterprises (cf. Dt. xvi. 15, xxviii. 12). For the destructive effects of hail, cf. Ex. ix. 25, 26, Ps. lxxviii. 47:

yet were ye not towards me: i. e. were not disposed towards me (2 K. vi. 11, Hos. iii. 3, Ez. xxxvi. 9 'I am towards you'). The Heb. here is peculiar: it is varied from 'yet ye returned not unto me' in Am. iv. 9 (also vv. 6, 8, 10, 11), just referred to. It is best explained philologically by Wellh. The correction ולא שבתם is violent.

A second prophecy, delivered on the same day as the last, and addressed specially to Zerubbabel, in which the prophet develops further the thoughts expressed by him two months previously (ii. 6 f.; see ii. 1); and promises Zerubbabel that on the approaching overthrow of the powers of the world, which is to inaugurate the Messianic age, his position will remain secure, and Yahweh will constitute him His trusted representative. The thought of the approaching downfall of the powers opposed to Israel appears also in Zechariah (see i. 15, 21, ii. 9, vi. 8): for the honour and distinction vouchsafed to Zerubbabel, see also Zech. iv. 7-10, and cf. on Zech. vi. 13.

I will shake (Heb. am shaking) the heavens and the earth. As ii. 6. The participle, of the imminent future, as Nah. ii. 2.

22. The political aspect of the approaching crisis is developed here more fully and distinctly than in ii. 6 f.

throw the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the nations; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother. In that day, saith the <sup>23</sup> LORD of hosts, will I take thee, O Zerubbabel, my servant, the son of Shealtiel, saith the LORD, and will make thee as a signet: for I have chosen thee, saith the LORD of hosts.

come down: i. e. be struck down. Cf. Is. xxxiv. 7; Jer. xlviii. 15, l. 27 (where 'come down' has the same meaning); Zech. xi. ~~end~~.

every one, &c. They will fall by one another's hands,—either through a panic seizing them or through quarrels breaking out among them. Cf. Jud. vii. 22; Ez. xxxviii. 21; Zech. xiv. 13.

23. The promise to Zerubbabel: Yahweh will make him His signet-ring, inseparable from Himself, and the symbol of His authority.

as a signet. The signet in the ancient East was a mark of honour and distinction, and was given by a monarch to an important minister, as a mark of confidence and authority (cf. Gen. xli. 42; Est. iii. 10). For the figure, as here used, cf. Jer. xxii. 24; and observe that the honourable position from which it is there said that Yahweh would degrade Jehoiachin is here conferred by Haggai upon his grandson (see on i. 1), Zerubbabel. The Messianic aspirations which attached formerly to the Davidic king are transferred by Haggai to Zerubbabel, who becomes, in virtue of the position thus assigned to him, a type of Christ.

I have chosen thee: viz. to be the Messianic ruler of the future: cf. Zech. vi. 9-13, with the notes.

It is no doubt strange to find the date specified in a prophecy delivered on the very day itself; and hence it is possible that the words 'from the four and twentieth day of the ninth month' in this verse are a gloss derived from v. 10. Wellh., Nowack, and Marti go further, and reject the following clause, 'since the day' &c., as well, regarding it also as a gloss, based upon an incorrect explanation of v. 15. But for this view there are no sufficient grounds: if the clause be omitted, not only is no date mentioned for the foundation of the Temple, but the stress laid upon 'this day' in vv. 15, 18, 19, as marking a change in Yahweh's attitude towards the people (v. 19<sup>b</sup>), remains unaccounted for.

INTRODUCTION

ZECHARIAH, son of Berechiah, and grandson of Iddo, of priestly descent (Neh. xii. 4, 16), prophesied, according to i. 1-7, and vii. 1, in the second and fourth years of Darius Hystaspis (B. C. 520 and 518). He was thus a contemporary of Haggai; and he is unquestionably identical with the Zechariah, son of Iddo, who is named in Ezr. v. 1, vi. 14 as co-operating with Haggai in his efforts to induce the people to prosecute the work of rebuilding the Temple.

The historical situation in 520 B. C. has been sufficiently described in the Introduction to Haggai. To recapitulate briefly what was there stated in greater detail: in the first year of Cyrus, B. C. 537, a large body of exiles returned from Babylon to Judah; they settled down in their old homes, but, partly from the difficulty of bringing the land again into cultivation, partly from a succession of bad seasons, and partly from troubles arising from their neighbours, the people fell into a state of apathy and despondency; and though the work of rebuilding the new Temple had been begun formally in 536, nothing further had been done to it till Haggai, two months before Zechariah's opening prophecy (i. 1-6), succeeded in stirring up the people to resume the work (Hag. i. 14, 15). A month later, Haggai had allayed the doubts of those who questioned whether the new Temple would ever be comparable to the old with the promise that the latter glory of the house should exceed its former glory, on account, viz., of the treasures which the nations would offer for its adornment (Hag. ii. 1-9). In the following month Zechariah begins to prophesy.

Zechariah's prophecies fall into three clearly-defined parts, which may be headed respectively: (1) A call to repentance (i. 1-6); (2) Visions of hope and encouragement for Judah (i. 7-vi. 15); (3) Yahweh's promises and demands for the future (chs. vii-viii).

I. i. 1-6 (eighth month of Darius' second year). A call to repentance, as the first condition of the return of Yahweh's favour, which the people thought had for ever left them.

II. i. 7-vi. 15 (three months later, and two months after Hag. ii. 10-23). Visions of hope and encouragement for Judah (i. 7-vi. 8), with a closely related historical appendix (vi. 9-15). This forms the central and most characteristic part of Zechariah's prophecy. The visions all centre upon the great questions of the day: what were the prospects of Judah for the future? how did she stand towards her heathen neighbours? would the Temple ever be finished? They form a well-arranged whole, showing how Yahweh's promises to His people will be fulfilled, and how the various obstacles, whether from without or within, which seem destined to thwart them, will one after another be removed. The answers given to these questions are not mere temporal promises: they all contain a large ideal or 'Messianic' element, which differs from the corresponding element in previous prophets only in being determined by, and accommodated to, the historical conditions of the time.

The first vision (i. 7-17). Yahweh's Four Horsemen. Yahweh's horsemen, who act as scouts or patrols, report that the earth is at rest: there is no sign of any movement among the nations, such as Haggai, a few months before (ii. 6 f., 21 f.), had declared would within 'a little while' bring in the Messianic age: but Yahweh assures the prophet that He is still, as of old, jealous for His people, and ere long Jerusalem and the cities of Judah will be rebuilt, and His people again be prosperous.

The second vision (i. 18-21). The Four Horns and the Four Smiths. Four horns, symbolizing the nations opposed to Israel, have their power broken by four smiths.

The third vision (ii. 1-5). The Man with the Measuring-Line. The new Jerusalem is to have no walls; for its population is to be free to spread far and wide, and Yahweh will be its sufficient defence. In a lyric epilogue, attached to the vision (ii. 6-13), the prophet calls upon the Jews still in Babylon to hasten and return; for Yahweh is about to take up His abode in Zion, and many peoples will join themselves to Him.

The fourth vision (ch. iii). The High-Priest, Joshua, and the Satan. The calamities which continued to beset the people seemed to them an indication that there was still some sin clinging to them, which was an obstacle to their complete restoration to Yahweh's favour, and the advent of the promised future. By the vision of the high-priest, Joshua, representing the people, accused by the Satan, but acquitted, and clothed in clean garments, it is shown that this sin is done away with; and a promise is added of the speedy advent of the Messiah, and of the consummation of national felicity.

The fifth vision (ch. iv). The Seven-Branched Candlestick, and the Two Olive-Trees. Whatever the candlestick may be taken to signify (see the notes), this vision shows that the community presided over by Zerubbabel and Joshua is ever under the watchful care of Yahweh's eyes; and that Zerubbabel, in spite of difficulties, will successfully complete the building of the Temple.

The sixth vision (v. 1-4). The Flying Roll. The land to be purged of sinners. A roll, inscribed with curses, flies over the Holy Land, as a token that in future the curse for sin will never fail to light upon the sinner.

The seventh vision (v. 5-11). The Woman in the Barrel. The land to be purged of sin. Israel's sin, personified as a woman, is carried off in a barrel, and deposited in Babylonia, where for the future it is to remain.

The eighth vision (vi. 1-8). The Four Chariots. Four chariots, drawn by variously-coloured horses, go forth to execute God's judgements upon the heathen, in different parts of the earth, especially in Babylonia.

vi. 9-15. Historical Appendix. A crown to be made of the gold and silver which some of the exiles had sent as an offering to the Temple, and placed on the head of Zerubbabel<sup>1</sup>, who is to complete the building of the Temple, and be the Messianic ruler of the future, with Joshua as priest at his side.

III. Chs. vii-viii (two years afterwards, in Darius' fourth year, B. C. 518). Yahweh's promises, and moral demands, for the future. Zechariah, in answer to an inquiry addressed to him (vii. 1-3), declares that Yahweh demands no fasts, but only the observance of His moral commands, which their forefathers, to their cost, had neglected (vii. 4-14). And he ends his Book with a decalogue of promises (ch. viii), describing the happy days in store for Judah, if only it will satisfy Yahweh's moral demands.

The most characteristic feature of Zechariah's prophecies are the visions. The vision was a frequent mode of prophetic intuition in Israel (cf. Hos. xii. 10; Am. vii-ix; Is. vi; Jer. i, xxiv); but, in the prophecies which we still possess, it is most fully represented in the Books of Ezekiel and Zechariah. The vision is a projection or creation of the mind, analogous to the dream: the subject falls into a state of trance, or ecstasy, in which the channels connecting the brain with external objects are closed; the power of the will to guide thought is relaxed: on the other hand, the imagination, or faculty of combining images and ideas, which have been previously apprehended, into new forms, is abnormally active; and the pictures created by it stand out the more vividly, in the absence of the sharper impressions produced in a waking state of the senses. Psychologically the vision may thus be described as a combination into new forms, under the influence of some determining impulse, of the images and impressions with which the mind, through its waking experience, is stored. In a prophetic vision the determining impulse will have been due to the operation of the revealing Spirit: Zechariah, we may suppose, had been brooding over the condition and prospects of his people: the restoration of God's favour, the triumph over the heathen, the completion of the Temple, to be followed immediately by the advent of the Messianic age, the position to be taken in it by Joshua and Zerubbabel, and the felicity and sinlessness which would then be the nation's lot—these and kindred subjects had been long in his mind: he had, perhaps, thought of some of them in connexion with the same figures and imagery with which they appear associated in the visions; and the visions exhibit the shape which they ultimately took in his imagination. How some of the same subjects are treated by him without the concomitants of a vision may be seen in vi. 9-15, and in chs. vii-viii: the predominant ideas are still clearly the same.

It remains, however, a question whether in the case of Zechariah, whose visions in some cases are much more circumstantial than those of the earlier prophets, we have throughout the narration of actual visions, and not rather (G. A. Smith, p. 274) 'a series of conscious and artistic allegories—the deliberate translation into a carefully constructed symbolism of the Divine truths with which the prophet was entrusted by his God.' At least in part, the visions may well be not more than literary forms. And if we ask further why a man 'with such gifts of direct speech, such a keen desire to stir the public conscience' (see i. 2-6, vii-viii), and 'such clear views of his people's character and history,' should choose to express the latter by an imagery so artificial and involved, we may perhaps answer with the same writer that this, if partly a result of the natural bent of the prophet's mind, was partly also a result of the circumstances of his time: 'the exiles were not responsible citizens or statesmen, but dreamers. They were inspired by mighty hopes for the future, and not fettered by the practical necessities of a definite historical situation upon which these hopes had to be immediately realized.' They consequently gave the reins to their imagination, and threw the truths which they were inspired to discern into symbolic pictures carefully elaborated in all their details.

A standing feature in Zechariah's visions is the presence in them of angels. In the visions of the earlier prophets

(Am. vii-ix; Jer. i, xxiv) angels do not appear; whatever is said or done, Yahweh Himself is the speaker or doer; the only exceptions being 1 K. xxii. 19 ff., and Is. vi, where, in the representation of Yahweh's celestial court, angelic beings are naturally present. But in Ezekiel's visions angels, there regularly called 'men,' are a frequent feature: some execute Yahweh's judgement upon Jerusalem (Ez. ix. 1-x. 6); and another, in Ezekiel's vision of the restored Temple (Ez. xl-xlviii), conducts the prophet through the different parts, measures them, and explains the details to him (Ez. xl. 3, 4, 5, &c.). In Zechariah's visions angels are a constant feature: Zechariah never sees Yahweh, or is spoken to by Him directly. And so in his book we have the 'man that talked with me,' the interpreting angel who explains the visions to the prophet (i. 13, 14, 19, ii. 3, iv. 1, 4, 5, v. [2, 3,] 10, vi. 4), and we have besides the 'man' riding the red horse in i. 8, 'another angel' in ii. 3, and 'Yahweh's angel' himself in i. 11, 12, iii. 1, 2 [see note], 3, 5, 6. This predominance of angels in the visions of Ezekiel and Zechariah is due, probably, to a changed conception of the method by which Yahweh operated in the world. The earlier prophets had such a vivid sense of Yahweh's personal and practical interest in the affairs of His people that they were conscious of no need for the intermediate agency of angels: but with Ezekiel there arose an increased sense of the loftiness of God, and of the distance separating Him from earth; and so in Zech. iii, for instance, when Joshua and the Satan appear before the Divine tribunal, judgement is given by 'the angel of Yahweh,' who, as in the older historical books, 'though distinct from Yahweh, yet represents Him so directly and fully that when he speaks or acts Yahweh Himself is felt to speak or act'<sup>1</sup>: elsewhere, if the material details of a vision have to be explained, this is done by a 'man,' i. e. by an angelic being, acting on Yahweh's behalf,

Of Zechariah's eight visions, three, the first two (i. 7-17, 18-21) and the last (vi. 1-8), deal with the relation of Israel to the heathen world without. In his method of dealing with this relation we observe a further difference between Zechariah and the older prophets. The older prophets,—Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, and Jeremiah, for instance,—have always in view the actual nations, the Assyrians or the Chaldeans, as the case may be, who are threatening Israel at the time when they are writing: Zechariah, developing a line of treatment which had begun with Zephaniah and Ezekiel (chs. xxxviii-xxxix), deals with heathen powers in the abstract: their overthrow is predicted; but what powers are intended, and by what historical movements they are to be destroyed, does not appear: the prophet employs indefinite symbolical or apocalyptic representations,—angelic horsemen patrolling the earth in i. 8-11, 'horns' and 'smiths' in i. 18-21, and 'chariots' carrying God's wrath into different quarters of the earth in vi. 1-8. This, again, is a peculiarity connected with the same absence of a definite political situation remarked upon above. It was necessary to assure the people that Israel, and the kingdom of God which it represented, would not succumb before the powers of the world: but there being no dangers actually threatening it, Zechariah conveys this assurance through symbolical representations of the means employed by God for its protection. In the peculiar character of their symbolism the visions of Zechariah prepare the way for the symbolical representations of the later Apocalypses, Daniel, Enoch, 2 Esdras, &c.

The remaining five visions (chaps. ii-v) deal with the future of Israel itself as a nation. Zechariah, as we have seen, was of priestly descent; and this no doubt accounts to a certain extent for the prominence which the Temple, and the high-priest, assume in his outlook into the future. But the completion of the Temple was the pressing question of the day: Ezekiel had seen in vision (x. 18 f., xi. 23), shortly before the destruction of Jerusalem, Yahweh leave the Temple; he had afterwards (chaps. xl ff.) made elaborate provision for its restoration, and had also in vision seen Yahweh solemnly re-enter it (xliii. 4, 5). Without a Temple God could not dwell in the midst of His people, and the national restoration was incomplete. Haggai and Zechariah both urged upon the people the duty of hastening on the restoration of the Temple. To its completion they attached, as other prophets had done to the great coming events of their day, ideal hopes. Isaiah, for instance, had pictured the golden reign of righteousness and peace as beginning immediately after the downfall of the Assyrian (cf. on Hag. ii. 6); and so Zechariah, idealizing similarly the approaching future, pictures the completion of the Temple as inaugurating the same ideal age, when Judah and its inhabitants, with Yahweh again dwelling in their midst (ii. 10-12), will be prosperous and happy (ii. 4, 5, iii. 10), no longer assailed by foes (ii. 8, 9, and elsewhere), purged of sinners (v. 1-4), and sin (iii. 9, v. 5-11; cf. Is. i. 26, iv. 3, xxix. 20-24, xxxiii. 24), ruled by their ideal king,—whom Zechariah, as can scarcely be doubted (see on iii. 8, vi. 11), conceives as represented by Zerubbabel,—with Joshua as priest at his side (vi. 13), maintaining faithfully the ritual observances of the Temple (iii. 7), and when 'many nations' (as Isaiah also had foretold, ii. 2, 3, and elsewhere) will press forward, eager to share the same spiritual privileges, and 'join themselves' to Yahweh (ii. 11). Many of the same thoughts of Israel's felicity, in the coming Messianic age, recur in chap. viii (vv. 3-8, 12-13, 15; also, vv. 20-3, the adhesion of foreign nations). Like Isaiah, Zechariah was disappointed: the completion of the Temple was not followed by an age of ideal happiness and goodness : nevertheless, his visions remain as ideals of the goal designed by God for man, and of the goal to which, we may hope, human history is, if slowly, advancing. The Messianic expectations attached to Zerubbabel were naturally fulfilled, in a larger sense, by Christ. Zechariah was not, like the older prophets, called upon to rebuke : he nowhere, for instance, refers to idolatry : his task was to reassure and encourage his people at a time when despondency and depression had taken possession of them (p. 150). Nevertheless he opens his prophecy with a call to repentance (i. 2-6) ; and in chs. vii and viii he appears as a true heir of the older prophets, insisting upon the moral demands of righteousness and mercy which Yahweh made of His people, and which, he declares, are the condition upon which alone His bright promises for the future can be fulfilled. Zechariah thus teaches, more distinctly, perhaps, than any other prophet, how only man's co-operation, responding to the promptings of the Spirit of God, can ever bring in the golden age upon earth.

PART I (i. 2-6).

A call to repentance.

2-6. A call to repentance, as the condition of the return of Yahweh's favour. The call is founded upon the experience of the past: the pre-exilic Israelites had turned a deaf ear to the warnings of the prophets, and Yahweh's judgements had overtaken them: let those whom the prophet now addresses take a lesson from their example.

2. with your fathers: who, viz. (v. 4), turned not at my rebuke: if, therefore (v. 3), you wish me to deal differently with you, act yourselves differently from them; return unto me, and I will return unto you.

3. Return, &c. This is what had been taught in substance by many previous prophets (e. g. Hos. xiv. 2-4; Is. i. 19; Jer. iii. 12-15, xxix. 12-14); but the form occurs here for the first time. Cf. Mal. iii. 7; 2 Chr. xxx. 6; also Jas. iv. 8.

4. the former prophets: i. e. the pre-exilic prophets; cf. vii. 7, 12. As Wellh. has remarked, the expression shows how deeply the Jews of the restoration felt the gulf which separated them from pre-exilic Israel.

saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Return ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doings: but they did not hear, nor hearken unto me, saith the LORD. Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they 5 live for ever? But my words and my statutes, which I 6 commanded my servants the prophets, did they not overtake your fathers? and they turned and said, Like as the LORD of hosts thought to do unto us, according to our ways, and according to our doings, so hath he dealt with us.

Upon the four and twentieth day of the eleventh 7

Return ye, &c. Into these words Zechariah casts the quintessence of the teaching of the pre-exilic prophets: man's repentance is the condition of God's assistance. The phraseology is modelled upon that of Jeremiah: see esp. Jer. xxv. 5; cf. also xviii. 11, xxiii. 22<sup>b</sup>, xxxv. 15.

now: the enclitic 'now' (נָּ), better rendered, I pray you.

nor attended unto me. Cf. Jer. vi. 10, 17, 19, xviii. 18 (Heb.).

5, 6. An objection met. The people are supposed to argue that the fathers are long dead, and what have the former prophets to do with the present generation? Zechariah replies: It is true, your fathers and the prophets belong to the past; but (v. 6) not so my words: your fathers were obliged to own that they were fulfilled in their case; and unless you repent, they will be fulfilled again in yours.

5. where are they? The word 'they' is emphatic.

6. my statutes, &c. Rather, my decrees (viz. of judgement) with which I commissioned, &c.

my servants the prophets. So first in Am. iii. 7; most frequently in Jeremiah (six times), and the compiler of Kings (five times).

overtake. Cf. Dt. xxviii. 15, 45.

PART II (i. 7—vi. 15).

Visions of hope and encouragement for Judah.

7-17. Zechariah's first vision. Yahweh's Four Horsemen. On the circumstances in which the people now found themselves, and month, which is the month Shebat, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD unto Zechariah the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo, the prophet, 8 saying, I saw in the night, and behold a man riding upon a red horse, and he stood among the myrtle trees that were in the <sup>a</sup>bottom; and behind him there were

the direction which they may be supposed to have given to the prophet's thoughts and feelings, which formed, no doubt, the human occasion of these visions, see the Introduction, p. 176f.

The object of the first vision is to show how, in spite of appearances to the contrary, God's anger with His people is at an end, and that ere long they will be in possession of every prosperity. The prophet finds himself in imagination in one of the myrtle-covered glens near Jerusalem: he sees what is in appearance a body of horsemen,—a reflection, perhaps, of the military bands and patrols of the Persians. The leader of the party is in front, the others are behind. It soon appears, however, that they are not in reality Persians; they are angelic beings, scouts of God, who have come in from patrolling the earth, bringing their reports with them. The whole earth, they declare, is at rest: there is no sign of any movement upon it, such as Haggai, only a few months before, had foretold was in 'a little while' to overthrow the powers of the heathen (Hag. ii. 6, 7, 20-22), and bring in for Israel the Messianic age. The angel who is speaking with the prophet thereupon inquires how much longer Jerusalem is to rest under the Divine displeasure, and is assured in reply that Yahweh's wrath now at last is turned to pity: Jerusalem and the Temple will ere long be rebuilt, and the prosperity of His people will be no longer delayed.

7. the four and twentieth day, &c. Three months since Zechariah had come forward with his call to repentance (i. 1-6), and exactly two months since Haggai's encouraging prophecies, ii. 18-19, 20-23:

in the bottom. The word is used elsewhere only of the 'deep' of the sea (Ps. cvii. 24 al.); and its applicability to a valley-bottom is very doubtful. The rend. of RVm., shady place (cf. LXX τῶν κατακίων), or glen, implying the least possible change in the vocalization, is preferable:

horses, red, sorrel, and white. Then said I, O my lord, 9 what are these? And the angel that talked with me said unto me, I will shew thee what these be. And the man 10 that stood among the myrtle trees answered and said, These are they whom the LORD hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth. And they answered the 11 angel of the LORD that stood among the myrtle trees, and said, We have walked to and fro through the earth, and, behold, all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest. Then the angel of the LORD answered and said, O LORD 12

sorrel: i.e. yellowish-red. The reason why the horses are mentioned, rather than their riders, appears to be because some significance is regarded as attaching to their colours; though what this significance is, is not explained, and is by no means self-evident. Most probably the colours stand in some relation to the quarters of the earth which the horsemen are supposed to have been severally patrolling (cf. vi. 2, 3, 6): the supposition (Keil) that they have a reference to the mission which they had to discharge is not supported by the context: all bring back the same report (the case of Rev. vi. 2, 4, 8, is obviously different).

9. O my lord, what are these? The words are addressed to the interpreting angel, of whose presence in the vision we are first made aware by this question and the following answer.

the angel that talked with me. The title by which the angel who explains to Zechariah what he beholds is distinguished throughout the visions (i. 13, 14, 19, ii. 3, iv. 1, 4, 5, v. 10, vi. 4).

I will shew thee (lit. 'make thee see'). He does not say, I will tell thee, but I will shew thee, i.e. thou wilt see directly what they are.

to walk to and fro: i.e. to patrol (cf. Job i. 7).

11. Hereupon the horsemen speak themselves, and report to Yahweh's angel—who also, it now appears, as well as the rider of vv. 8, 10, stood among the myrtle-trees—that nothing is stirring in the whole earth; there is no sign of any movement bringing in for Israel the Messianic age. Zechariah did not attach to the commotions in the Persian empire (p. 150) the same significance that Haggai appears to have done.

of hosts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation these threescore and ten years?
 13 And the LORD answered the angel that talked with me

angel, though from one point of view representing Yahweh (v. 11), is from another point of view independent of Him, and represents the feelings of Zechariah and his countrymen, who could not but be disappointed at the answer given by the horsemen in v. 11; accordingly he makes intercession on behalf of Israel, and asks Yahweh why, though seventy years have passed (B.C. 586-520), His anger,—as was popularly inferred at the time (see p. 150) to be the case,—still rested upon Judah and Jerusalem. In this intercession of Yahweh's angel on Israel's behalf we may, perhaps, see the beginning of the doctrine of patron angels, representing particular peoples, which meets us later in a more developed form in the Book of Daniel (Dan. x. 21, xii. 1).

answered. The word does not necessarily mean 'replied to a question'; it may mean, as it does in v. 11, 'spoke in a manner corresponding to a particular situation, or the feelings called forth by it': cf. for instance, Job iii. 2; Is. xiv. 10; Dan. iii. 14, iv. 19.

not have mercy. Better, have no compassion,—the word used in Is. xiv. 1, xlix. 13; Ps. cii. 13.

13. Yahweh Himself now intervenes, and 'answers' the interpreting angel with comforting assurances. Under what form Yahweh appeared in the vision is not indicated by Zechariah, any more than it is by Amos in Am. vii. 1-9, viii. 1-3, ix. 1: He is introduced abruptly, just as the interpreting angel is in v. 9, and 'Yahweh's angel' in v. 11<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> The explanation of this vision given above (which is that of Keil) appears to the present writer to be the most satisfactory and consistent: but it must be allowed that the description, in some of its details, is not very distinctly expressed; and some commentators have identified the 'angel of Yahweh that stood among the myrtle trees' of v. 11 with the 'man riding the red horse,' and also 'standing among the myrtle trees,' of vv. 8, 10 (so e.g. T. T. Perowne), and (understanding 'answered' in v. 13 in its strict sense) the 'angel of Yahweh' in v. 12 with the 'angel that talked with me' of vv. 9, 13. This interpretation certainly imparts clearness into the description; but it can scarcely be the intention of the text as it stands. Accordingly We., Now., Marti, who adopt it, suppose the text to have been altered, and confused, in consequence of a misunderstanding, and correct it so as to make it express it distinctly; thus they read in v. 8 'a man standing among' &c. (so already with good words, even comfortable words. So the angel <sup>14</sup> that talked with me said unto me, Cry thou, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts: I am jealous for Jerusalem and for Zion with a great jealousy. And I am <sup>15</sup> very sore displeased with the nations that are at ease: for I was but a little displeased, and they <sup>a</sup>helped forward the affliction. Therefore thus saith the LORD: <sup>16</sup>

good words: i. e. gracious words, promises of prosperity: cf. Josh. xxiii. 14; Jer. xxix. 10.

I am jealous. 'I have been and still am jealous' is what the Heb. tense used implies. Yahweh's 'jealousy' for His people (cf. viii. 2) prompts Him now at last to interpose on its behalf: cf. Ez. xxxvi. 5, 6, xxxviii. 19; Is. xlii. 13, lix. 17.

15. But Yahweh is sore displeased with the nations; for they had done more evil to Israel than they were commissioned to do: He was angry (relatively) but a little with Israel, but they had helped unto evil, i. e. had helped, not simply as His instruments for the correction of Israel, but for evil (Jer. xlv. 11), or calamity, seeking to exterminate Israel. 'The fall of the Chaldaeans had effected nothing; the Persians were no better than the Chaldaeans; the power of the heathen had yet to be broken before the Messianic kingdom could be realized. The Jews were evidently in despair, because, even after their return to Palestine, things still went on quietly in their old way' (We.).

16, 17. Now, therefore, Yahweh's anger against His people is turned into compassion: the Temple and city will be rebuilt, and His people will again enjoy prosperity.

Ewald), and 'before' for 'behind,' they omit v. 10 as an incorrect gloss, anticipating v. 11, and they read in v. 11 'the man' for 'the angel of Yahweh,' and in v. 12 'the angel that talked with me' for 'the angel of Yahweh.' These corrections are, however, violent; and the indistinctness in the representation may, after all, be original.

I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies; my house shall be built in it, saith the LORD of hosts, and a line shall be stretched forth over Jerusalem. Cry yet again, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts: My cities <sup>a</sup>through prosperity shall yet be spread abroad; and the LORD shall yet comfort Zion, and shall yet choose Jerusalem.

with mercies. Rather, with compassion (as in vii. 9).

my house shall be built in it. The rebuilding of the Temple, in which Yahweh might again, as of old, take up His abode (cf. ii. 10), would be the final proof that the period of His wrath was at an end, and that He again viewed His people with favour. Cf. the solemn departure of Yahweh from His Temple, as seen in Ezekiel's vision, Ez. x. 18 f., xi. 23, and His re-entry into it, Ez. xliii. 4, 5.

shall yet overflow (Pr. v. 16) with prosperity. The marg. of RV. is to be followed.

shall yet comfort Zion. Cf. Is. li. 3, lii. 9<sup>b</sup>. LXX, however, has have compassion on (רחם for רחם), which suits the context better (see v. 12). Cf. Is. xiv. 1, of which 'shall yet choose' is in any case a reminiscence; also xlix. 13<sup>b</sup>, Jer xxx. 18 et.

horns. And I said unto the angel that talked with me, 19 What be these? And he answered me, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem. And the LORD shewed me four smiths. Then said I, 20, 21 What come these to do? And he spake, saying, These are the horns which scattered Judah, so that no man did lift up his head: but these are come to fray them, to cast down the horns of the nations, which lifted up their horn against the land of Judah to scatter it.

19. scattered. The expression is not applicable to a 'horn,' as such; but the prophet is thinking of the powers or peoples which the horns represent.

Judah, (even) Israel and Jerusalem. So the text must be rendered, the last three words being epexegetical. But they look very much like an explanatory gloss (cf. 'Judah' alone, v. 21).

so that, &c. Read probably so that it lifted not up its head (אָרָם for אֵרָם: cf., for the Hebrew, Mal. ii. 9).

to fray them. An archaism for to make them afraid (so, for the same Heb., Zeph. iii. 13 al.),—'afraid' being just the passive participle of to 'af-fray.' Better (as 'afraid' is now a weaker word in English than it was formerly), to affright (or disturb) them. In using the word Zechariah is thinking, as in the case of 'scattered,' not of the 'horns' (which could not be 'affrighted'), but of the peoples which the horns represent.

ii. 1-5. The third vision. The Man with the Measuring Line. A man with a measuring-line goes forth to lay out the site of the restored city; but he is interrupted by the interpreting angel: the new Jerusalem is to have no walls, for its population will be free to spread far and wide; and Yahweh will be its sufficient defence.

- 2 man with a measuring line in his hand. Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what 3 is the length thereof. And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out
4 to meet him, and said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall <sup>a</sup> be inhabited as villages without walls, by reason of the multitude of men

2. what is, &c. Rather, what should be; for Jerusalem was still only partially built.

3. went forth: viz. from beside me. But probably we should read, with LXX (εἰσῆκει), stood still (cf. iii. 5 end),—‘went forth’ being a lapsus calami, occasioned by the following ‘went out’ (the Hebrew for both expressions being the same).

went out. Better, came forth, viz. from some other part of the field of vision.

4. and said. Rather, and he said, the subject being, most probably, the interpreting angel, who remains always beside the prophet, and is not likely to have been sent on a message elsewhere (v. 4).

this young man. The man with the measuring-line,—the expression being, perhaps, used as implying one liable to act without consideration (1 K. iii. 7). The man with the measuring-line is to be stopped in his attempt to define the limits of the new city: Jerusalem will be too populous to admit of walls, and too secure, under Yahweh’s protection (v. 5), to need them.

as villages without walls. Lit. ‘as open-country-districts,’ as opposed to walled cities: cf. Ez. xxxviii. 11 (‘a land of open-country-districts,’ || ‘dwelling without walls’); also 1 S. vi. 18, Dt. iii. 5 (see on Hab. iii. 14). The idea of the expansion of Jerusalem in the ideal future as Is. xxxiii. 17, xlix. 19, 20, liv. 2.

5. For the thought of Yahweh surrounding Jerusalem with His protection, cf.,—though the figures are different,—Is. xxxiii. 21, xxvi. 1, lx. 18<sup>b</sup>.

and a glory will I be, &c. Cf. Is. lx. 1, 2; Ez. xliii. 2, 4, 5.

6-13. A lyric epilogue, attached to the vision, in which the prophet (1) in jubilant tones, recalling parts of 11 Isaiah, bids the Jews still in exile escape from the judgement about to break upon the heathen, and return to Palestine, vv. 6-9; and (2) calls upon Zion to exult, because Yahweh is about to take up again His abode in Jerusalem, and many nations will join themselves to Him, vv. 10-13.

the land of the north. An expression used vaguely, especially in Jeremiah (iii. 18, xxiii. 8 al.), of the land of Israel's exile, and understood, it seems, as including even Babylonia. Cf. on Zeph. iii. 13.

for I have spread you abroad, &c. The passage is difficult. (1) As rendered in RV., have spread abroad will naturally mean 'have scattered you' (see the same Hebrew in Ps. lxviii. 14, Ez. xvii. 21): in this case, however, 'as the four winds of heaven' agrees badly with 'the land of the north' from which alone Israel has just been bidden to return (see also v. 7 'Babylon'). (2) Hitzig, Keil, Wright, therefore, understand the words as a promise of future extension, the perfect being the prophetic perfect = 'I will spread you abroad'; but the thought of the restored Jews being spread abroad 'as the four winds of heaven,' i. e. generally over the earth, does not harmonize with v. 12, which implies that they are to be confined to Judah. (3) LXX has 'for I will gather you from the four winds of heaven': this yields the best sense; and, in spite of the not very easy corruption of קנצתי to פירשתי, which it presupposes, is probably to be preferred (so We., Now., Marti).

the four winds of the heaven. A late expression: vi. 5; Jer. xlix. 36; Dan. viii. 8, xi. 4.

7. Zion: i. e. the population of Zion; here, of such parts of it as were still in exile. However, We., Now., G. A. Smith, render more probably (with LXX), Ho, escape unto Zion: for the order of words in the Heb. in this case, cf. Josh. ii. 16; 1 S. v. 8; 1 K. ii. 26; Jer. ii. 10; Is. xxiii. 12.

escape. For a judgement is impending over the heathen world (v. 9; i. 21): cf. Is. xlv. 20; Jer. l. 8, 10, li. 6, 45.

thou that dwellest with. In the Heb. 'inhabitant of,' the term denoting the community, as often (e. g. Jer. x. 17; Mic. i. 11, 12: see RVm.). The 'daughter of Babylon' is a personification of the population of Babylon (on Zeph. iii. 14); but the entire

8 Babylon. For thus saith the LORD of hosts: <sup>a</sup> After glory hath he sent me unto the nations which spoiled you: for he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his expression, as here used, is peculiar; and probably בַּת ('daughter') is simply a dittograph, and we should render, 'Ho, escape unto Zion, thou inhabitress of Babylon' (i. e. the Jewish community still resident in Babylon).
9 eye. For, behold, I will shake mine hand over them,

8, 9. A very difficult passage, though the general sense is plain: let the exiles still in Babylon hasten to quit it (v. 7), because (v. 9) it is God's purpose to execute judgement upon the nations who have spoiled them. As the text stands, the speaker must be the angel of v. 3<sup>b</sup>, who was told by the interpreting angel to give the promises contained in vv. 4<sup>b</sup>, 5; and he must say that he had been sent against the nations which had spoiled Israel after glory, i. e. either to win glory or success in his mission (Hitz., Ew.), or (Keil) to gain glory or honour (as the cognate verb is also rendered, Ex. xiv. 4, 17, 18) over the heathen, by executing God's judgement upon them (cf. Ez. xxviii. 22, xxxix. 13). There is, however, nothing to suggest that the angel is the speaker here, especially as a new paragraph appears to begin with v. 6; and that the speaker in 'hath sent me' is the prophet is strongly supported by v. 9 end, compared with v. 11<sup>b</sup>, iv. 9<sup>b</sup>, and vi. 15. Hence We., Now., G. A. Smith, Marti, suppose that the words 'after glory he hath sent me' are either out of place, or parenthetical; and render, 'For thus saith Yahweh of hosts—(after glory hath he sent me)—unto (or concerning) the nations that spoil you (for he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye), that, behold, I will swing my hand over them,' &c. This yields a more probable general sense: the objection to it is that the appearance here of the words after glory hath he sent me is unexplained: why should either the prophet himself, or, if the words are a gloss, another on his behalf, thus strangely express his hope of success in his mission? <sup>1</sup>

8. toucheth the apple of his eye: i. e. touches what is most precious to Him, and most carefully guarded: cf. Dt. xxxii. 10 (where Israel is said to be 'kept' by Yahweh 'as the apple of his eye'); Ps. xvii. 8.

9. shake. Better, swing: see Is. xi. 15, xix. 16; cf. x. 32.

<sup>1</sup> RVm. (= AV.) means 'After the glory promised in v. 5 has come upon Israel'; but there is no art. in the Heb. to show that there is any reference to v. 5, nor is the sense thus obtained probable in itself.

111. The fourth vision. The High-Priest, Joshua, and the Satan. Joshua, the high-priest, appears, standing before Yahweh, clothed in filthy garments, symbolizing the iniquities of the people: the Satan, essaying to accuse him, is rebuked; his filthy garments are removed from him, and his iniquities are taken away (vv. 1-5). After this he is given rule over the Temple, with the right of priestly access to Yahweh, and receives a promise of the advent of the Messiah, the forgiveness of the people's sin, and the restoration of national felicity (vv. 6-10).

The disappointments and vexations of the restoration (p. 149) were felt keenly by the returned exiles, and seemed to them to be an indication that Yahweh was still angry with His people (i. 12 ff.), on account viz. of the idolatries and other iniquities of their forefathers, the guilt of which still rested upon them, and was brought to remembrance against them before God. In the present dramatically conceived vision, these disturbing thoughts are set at rest. It is emphatically taught that no impediment exists in God's eyes to Israel's complete restoration: the Satan, who is pictured as the accuser, is silenced; whatever guilt still attaches to Israel is removed by Yahweh's free grace.

the Satan. The word 'Satan' means opposer; and denotes one who sets himself to oppose or thwart another in his purpose (Nu. xxii. 22, 32; 2 S. xix. 22; 1 K. v. 4, xi. 14, 23, 25: EVV. 'adversary'), or claims, sometimes with the collateral idea, of accusing maliciously or falsely (Ps. cix. 6; cf. the cognate verb vv. 4. 20, 29, Zech. iii. 1 end). It appears further in the OT. as the name of a specific angel, 'the Opposer,' whose part it is to oppose men in their pretensions to a right standing with God, and to test their sincerity (Job i-ii), to prompt them to do acts which will bring them into disfavour with God (1 Chr. xxi. 1), and, as here, to remind God, in no friendly spirit, of their sins. The Satan does not appear in the OT., as in the NT., as definitely tempting to sin. The word always in the OT., except in 1 Chr. xxi. 1, has the article, and was therefore felt distinctly to mean 'the Opposer.' In LXX it is represented by διάβολος, the 'false accuser,' from the collateral idea referred to above. See further

to be his adversary. In the Heb. one word, the verb cognate with 'Satan' (see the last note but one), and meaning to oppose, especially with false or malicious accusations (Ps. xxxviii. 20, lxxi. 13, cix. 4, 20, 29).

2. And Yahweh said. As the sequel shows, 'Yahweh' must here mean 'Yahweh's angel,' even if it be not a textual error for it (We., Now., Marti). Joshua is the people's spiritual representative; and in opposing him before Yahweh the Satan is in effect opposing, or maliciously accusing, the people, with the object viz. of showing that they had not yet been punished as much as their sins deserved. But he is silenced by Yahweh's angel: Yahweh, he is reminded, has chosen Jerusalem (1 K. viii. 44, xi. 13, &c.; cf. ch. i. 17, ii. 12); and was it necessary to persecute still further a 'brand plucked out of the fire'?

a brand plucked out of the fire: i.e. already greatly burnt, and only just saved from complete destruction. Nearly the same expression occurs in Am. iv. 11.

3. with filthy garments. Symbolizing the iniquity of the people. For 'filth' (צִמְאֻת) as fig. of sin, cf. Is. iv. 4, Pr. xxx. 12; and for the figure of the garment, Rev. iii. 4, 5, vii. 14, xix. 8.

stood before. As v. 1, in a forensic sense.

4. Symbolical removal of Joshua's (i. e. the people's) iniquities. he: i. e. the angel. 'Answered,' as i. 12.

those that stood before him. Viz. in attendance, waiting upon him, the allusion being to subordinate angels, by whom he would be pictured as surrounded. To stand before often has the sense of to 'wait upon'; for instance, Dt. i. 38, 1 S. xvi. 21, 1 K. x. 8.

rich apparel. As a mark of honour, and (indirectly) of purity. The word occurs besides only in Is. iii. 23, where it is rendered in RV. festival robes.

5. And I said, &c. If the text is correct, we must suppose that the prophet, anxious to see the high-priest more suitably clad, and watching with keen interest what was being done, involuntarily gives vent to his feelings, and expresses, though only as a wish, not as a command, what he desires to see done. But this is not very natural. The Syr. and the Vulg. (cf. RVm.) have And he said (i. e. the angel said), which is probably right. The LXX also, omitting And I said altogether, expresses the same sense.

fair. Better, clean, as the word (טָהוֹר) is usually rendered. This, however, was a common meaning of 'fair' in Old English (DB. s. v.); cf. in the Communion Service 'a fair white linen cloth.'

mitre. Better, turban (צִנִּיף), the word used of the turban of rich women (Is. iii. 23), or of royal or eminent persons (Is. lxii. 3; Job xxix. 14: not elsewhere), from צָנַף to 'wind round' (Is. xxii. 18 RVm.). It is here a mark of the dignity possessed by the high-priest; but the high-priest's 'turban' itself was called not zānīf, but miznépheth, Ex. xxviii. 4 al.

and the angel of the Lord stood by. Rather, the angel of Yahweh standing (a circumstantial clause), viz. while the high-priest's garments were being changed.

6-7. Promise to Joshua: if he is faithful to Yahweh, and duly maintains the rites of His worship, then he will have permanent authority over the Temple ('judge my house, and keep my courts'), and enjoy the right of entry to Yahweh's presence (viz. as the people's representative). In pre-exilic times the king was supreme over the Temple: here the authority which belonged formerly to the king is conferred upon the high-priest, upon the one condition of his being faithful to his charge.

8. thy fellows: i. e. the other, inferior priests, who 'sit before' (cf. 2 K. iv. 38, vi. 1; Ez. viii. 1, xiv. 1) the high-priest, receiving their instructions from him.

they are men of omen that, behold! I am bringing my servant, &c. The restored priesthood is a pledge of the approach of the Messianic kingdom. For 'portent' or 'omen' (מִסֵּה), cf. Is. viii. 18, where Isaiah and his sons, in virtue of their names, are 'signs and omens' of a brighter future for Israel; and Ez. xii. 6, 11, xxiv. 24, 27, where Ezekiel, in what he there does, is an 'omen' or 'portent' of the future. As the text stands, it is only Joshua's brother-priests, not Joshua himself, who are the 'men of omen': and We., Now., Smith, Marti are probably right in omitting כִּי ('for') after יָשָׁע ('before thee'), and rendering 'Hear, now, O Joshua the high-priest: thou and thy fellows that sit before thee are men of omen that I am bringing,' &c.

my servant. Of the ideal ruler of the future, or 'Messiah,' as Ez. xxxiv. 24, xxxvii. 24.

the Shoot (or rather, since there is no art., as a pr. name, Zemah, 'Shoot'). The Heb. zēmah cannot mean 'branch': as its other occurrences show, it is a general term for what sprouts or shoots from the ground (see e. g. Gen. xix. 25 'the growth of the ground,' where 'branch' would obviously be unsuitable). In Is. iv. 2 the 'growth' or 'shooting' of Yahweh means generally the produce of the soil, quickened and blessed by Yahweh in the blissful future which the prophet is there looking forward to: in Jer. xxiii. 5 ('Behold the days come, saith Yahweh, that I will raise up to David a righteous shoot, and he shall reign as king and prosper'), and in the parallel passage, xxxiii. 15 ('In those days

Joshua; upon one stone are seven eyes: behold, I will engrave the graving thereof, saith the LORD of hosts, and I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day.
 ■ In that day, saith the LORD of hosts, shall ye call every will I cause to shoot forth unto David a shoot of righteousness') it is a fig. designation of Israel's future ideal king, represented as a sprout or shoot; and here and in Zech. vi. 12, obviously on the basis of the two passages of Jeremiah, it is used actually as a title of the Messiah. vi. 12, compared with iv. 9, seems to show that Zech. means Zerubbabel, whose person is idealized, and who, when the Temple is finished, and the Messianic age has begun, will be the supreme civil ruler in it (cf. Hag. ii. 23). Observe that the expression, Behold, I am bringing, implies something conceived as taking place in the immediate future.

9. The meaning of the symbolism of this verse is uncertain. The following are the two most probable explanations. (1) That of Ewald, Steiner, T. T. Perowne, and Marti (Comm.) that the 'stone' is the same stone as that of iv. 7, the head or coping-stone of the Temple: it is lying in the vision before Joshua; the 'seven eyes' are those of Yahweh, symbolizing (as in iv. 10) His all-seeing providence; they are ever 'upon' it (Ezr. v. 5), and it will be engraved by Him with some appropriate inscription or ornamentation. The symbolism thus expresses in a word Yahweh's care for the completion of the Temple. (2) That of We. and Smend, that the 'stone' is a jewel in the diadem of the coming Messiah: the seven 'eyes' are seven facets upon it; upon one of these, probably the central one, Yahweh will engrave the name of the Messianic ruler, i. e. Zerubbabel (see the last note). Upon this view, the symbolism declares how all is ready for the advent of the Messianic ruler: Yahweh has even prepared the crown that he is to wear.

and I will remove, &c. With the completion of the Temple, the Messianic age begins; and the first event by which it is marked is the removal of the people's sin. The promise to Joshua (vv. 7-9) thus ends appropriately with words showing that a repetition of the Satan's accusation (v. 1) will be no more possible. Freedom from sin is one of the standing traits of the ideal future, as depicted by the prophets: cf. Is. i. 26, iv. 3-4, xxxii. 1-8, xxxiii. 24; Jer. xxxi. 33 f.; Ez. xxxvi. 25 f.; Dan. ix. 24.

in one day. Quickly, and completely: cf. Is. ix. 14, x. 17, xlvii. 9.

10. The general felicity which will then prevail.

shall ye call . . . under: i. e. call them in under (אֶת־תַּחַת), invite them to come and sit under. To sit under one's own vine and fig tree implies peace and security (1 K. iv. 25 [Heb. v. 5]; 1 Macc. xiv. 12, of the days of Simon): here a characteristic trait of the Messianic age, borrowed from Mic. iv. 4. Cf. viii. 12.

iv. The fifth vision. The Seven-Branched Candlestick and the Two Olive-Trees. The prophet sees a seven-branched golden candlestick, such as stood afterwards in the Second Temple, with seven lamps, fed by seven pipes from a bowl or reservoir of oil standing above them, and two olive trees standing beside it, one on each side, which (if v. 12 is genuine) supplied oil to the reservoir (comp. the illustration in Wright, p. 84). Vv. 6-10 contain an encouragement addressed to Zerubbabel: difficulties, it is said, will disappear before him, and in spite of mockers, he will himself finish the Temple which he has now begun.

The vision is a difficult one, and has been very differently interpreted. Taking the text as it stands, the candlestick with its seven lamps is generally supposed to symbolize the restored Jewish Church shining with the light of the Spirit (cf. Rev. i. 20), and receiving its supply of Divine grace (the oil) through the two channels of the spiritual and temporal power, Joshua and Zerubbabel (represented by the two olive trees, with the connecting spouts of v. 12). In the following notes the text is first explained in accordance with this general view, a new interpretation, which has much in its favour, being given afterwards.

1. and waked me, &c. The prophet, though still in his trance, was so affected by what he had seen and heard in the preceding visions, that he seemed to himself to have fallen into a state of stupor, from which he had to be roused by the interpreting angel, before he could become conscious of a fresh vision.

as a man, &c. He was not roused actually out of sleep.

2. What seest thou? introducing the description of the vision, as Am. vii. 8, viii. 2, Jer. i. 11, 13.

seven lamps. In the Temple of Solomon there were ten separate golden candlesticks (1 K. vii. 49; cf. Jer. lii. 19); but in the Priestly Code (Ex. xxv. 31-40) a single seven-branched and said unto me, Knowest thou not what these be?

<sup>a</sup> there are seven pipes to each of the lamps, which are

 6 And I said, No, my lord. Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the word of the LORD unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by <sup>b</sup> might, nor by power, but 7 by my spirit, saith the LORD of hosts. Who art thou, candlestick, also of gold, is prescribed,—the lamps of which, however, were not, like those in the vision, supplied with oil from a reservoir, but were trimmed and fixed on daily (Ex. xxvii. 20 RVm., 21) by the priests; and a candlestick of the same kind stood in the Second Temple, as we learn from 1 Macc. i. 23, iv. 49, and from the representation on the Arch of Titus.

seven pipes to each of the lamps. To symbolize, it has been supposed, the plentiful supply of oil. But the number, which would obviously give forty-nine pipes in all, is improbably large; and LXX and Vulg. (cited on RVm.) are most likely right in reading seven pipes to the lamps, i. e. one to each.

upon the top thereof: i. e. upon the top of the candlestick. But we should expect simply upon it (עלֶיהָ, as just before, 'thereon').

4. The prophet inquires the meaning of the seven lamps.

And I answered: i. e. began, in the sense explained on i. 12.

6-10. Promises to Zerubbabel.

6. This is the word, &c. If the text is here in order (see below) the meaning must be, This is the teaching of the vision, it is a message from Yahweh to Zerubbabel.

Not by might, &c. Zerubbabel will accomplish the work that he has in hand, not by human 'might,' or 'power,' but by the spirit of Yahweh (Hag. ii. 5) strengthening him.

7. Who art thou, &c.: i. e. whatever obstacles or difficulties may arise to impede Zerubbabel in his work, they will disappear before him. The apathy of the people, and the opposition of the Samaritans and others, had indeed, at any rate for the time, been

O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain: and he shall bring forth the head stone with shoutings of Grace, grace, unto it. Moreover the word 8 of the LORD came unto me, saying, The hands of 9 Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house; his hands shall also finish it; and thou shalt know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto you. For who hath 10 despised the day of small things? for they shall rejoice, and shall see the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel, overcome, and the building was in progress: but there might still be reason to fear these or similar hindrances recurring.

he shall bring forth, &c. I. e. he will complete the building of the Temple amid the acclamations of the multitude: Zerubbabel will bring forth in triumph, from the workshop in which it had been hewn into shape, the head stone,—the final coping-stone of the entire fabric,—with shoutings of Beautiful! beautiful! (Now., Marti), i. e. amid the applause and admiration of the people, as they see their Temple at last completed. 'Beautiful, beautiful!' is lit. Grace (i. e. graciousness, beauty, as Prov. i. 9 'a chaplet of grace,' iv. 9), grace to it! However, the words might also mean Favour, favour to it! (Hitz., Ew., Keil), i. e. May all favour it! 'Faveat ei Deus, faveant homines!'

8-9. A further promise, given through the prophet, that as Zerubbabel has begun the Temple, so he will assuredly finish it: the fulfilment of this prediction will be evidence that Zechariah has not spoken of himself, but has been truly sent by Yahweh (cf. Dt. xviii. 22).

hath sent me unto you. Cf. ii. 9, 11<sup>b</sup>, vi. 15.

10. The verse, as the text stands, will mean (Keil), For who ever despised the day of small things? i. e. No one who desires to accomplish, or does accomplish, anything great, despises the day of small beginnings; and these seven, (even) the eyes of Yahweh,—they run to and fro through the whole earth,—will rejoice and see (i. e. will see with joy) the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel; the verse as a whole thus meaning, 'If no one despises the small beginnings of the Temple, then Yahweh will watch with joy the progress of the work, and assist it with His blessing.' But the sense thus obtained implies a strained interpretation of the words used; and the second part of the verse is very imperfectly connected with the first: see pp. 203 f.

 I, and said unto him, What are these two olive trees unto him, What be these two olive branches, <sup>a</sup> which are beside the two golden spouts, that empty <sup>b</sup> the 13 golden oil out of themselves? And he answered me and they run to and fro through the whole earth: and see consequently every danger, from whatever quarter it may arise, which may threaten the progress of the building (Hitzig). Cf. 2 Chr. xvi. 9 (an evident reminiscence of the present passage); Rev. v. 6: also, for the general thought, Prov. xv. 3.

12. these two olive spikes (Pusey). Apparently the extreme ends of fruit-laden boughs; for elsewhere the Hebrew word always means an 'ear' (of corn), as Gen. xli. 5.

the golden oil. Lit. 'the gold,'—a very strange expression for 'golden oil.' Perhaps some words have dropped out and we should read, 'that empty out of themselves [the oil into] the [bowl of] gold.' Targ. has 'into the lamps of gold,' LXX either read or understood 'the pipes of gold' (v. 2).

out of: lit. 'from upon,' as 'spouts' would do.

13. The same reply, expressing surprise that Zechariah should not understand the symbolism, as in v. 5.

14. the two sons of oil. The Heb. word (yishār),—the word used in Dt. vii. 13, xi. 14, &c.,—denotes the freshly expressed juice of the olive; and is not the word (shémen) which denotes the oil as prepared for use, and ready, for example, to be employed for a lamp (Ex. xxv. 6), or in anointing (1 S. x. 1). The expression is commonly understood (e. g. by Ew., Hitz., Keil) to mean the two anointed ones, and to symbolize Joshua (as the anointed high-priest, Lev. iv. 3) and Zerubbabel, as representing remy lord. Then said he, These are the two sons of oil, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth.

spectively the priestly and kingly offices, the channels by which, if v. 12 is genuine (see below), Israel (symbolized by the lamps) is kept supplied with the Divine spirit (symbolized by the oil). 'Sons of oil' would, however, suggest rather the idea of full of oil,—as indeed an olive tree might be metaphorically said to be,—than anointed with oil: cf. p. 204<sup>1</sup>.

that stand by, &c.: characterizing the two 'sons of oil' as Yahweh's servants: see Jud. iii. 19; 1 K. xxii. 19. The expression hardly differs from 'stand before,' iii. 4.

the Lord of the whole earth: as vi. 5, Josh. iii. 11, 13, Mic. iv. 13, Ps. xcvi. 5.

It can hardly have escaped the reader's notice that vv. 6-14, as they have been now explained, do not in parts yield a satisfactory sense. In v. 6 'This is the word,' &c., is not a natural answer to the question asked in v. 4; vv. 6 (from 'This is the word')-10<sup>a</sup> in fact interrupt the explanation of the vision with a different subject altogether, viz. the promise to Zerubbabel; and v. 10 yields an improbable sense, to say nothing of the awkwardness of the Hebrew (from שבעה עינים), rendered as it must be rendered, with the text as it stands. On the other hand, as Wellhausen was the first to perceive, the words in v. 10, which are so awkward where they now stand, would form a perfectly natural answer to the question in v. 4; and if it might be assumed that the promise to Zerubbabel in vv. 6-10<sup>a</sup> had become misplaced, and that it was originally an independent prophecy, standing perhaps at the end of the chapter, all would run smoothly. We should then have, viz. :—<sup>6</sup> And he answered and spake unto me, saying, <sup>10 b</sup> These seven are the eyes of Yahweh, which run to and fro through the whole earth. <sup>11</sup> Then answered I, and said unto him, What are these two olive trees upon the right side of the candlestick and upon the left side thereof? [<sup>12</sup> And I answered a second time and said unto him, What be these two olive spikes, which are beside the two golden spouts, that empty the gold(en oil) out of themselves?] <sup>13</sup> And he answered me and said, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my lord. <sup>14</sup> Then said he, These are the two sons of oil, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth.

This view of the original form of the passage has been accepted by Nowack, G. A. Smith, and Marti. If it is correct, the seven lamps (v. 2) will symbolize Yahweh's eyes, which, on the one hand, sweep through the whole earth to descry approaching danger or trouble, and to protect and deliver His loyal servants (see especially 2 Chr. xvi. 9), and, on the other hand, are specially present in Israel, to watch over and defend it. V. 12 is regarded by Wellh., Nowack, and Marti as an interpolation: not only is the object of the re-formulation of the question in v. 11 far from apparent, but the verse describes the candlestick quite differently from vv. 2, 3, and is also entirely disregarded by the angel in his answer, v. 14; if, moreover, it is true that the lamps symbolize Yahweh's eyes, it is incredible, whatever the 'sons of oil' in v. 14 signify, that these can be regarded as supplying them with brightness and light. If v. 12 is an interpolation, it must be supposed that the olive trees in v. 3 were (incorrectly) assumed to be intended for the purpose of supplying the lamps with oil, and that this verse was added in order to express this more distinctly. Of course if v. 12 be omitted, the olive trees of v. 3 merely stand beside the candlestick; they are otherwise unconnected with it, and do not supply the lamps with oil. And the object of this part of the vision, as a whole, will be now to show how Joshua and Zerubbabel,—who, as before, are symbolized by the two olive trees,—(1) stand under Yahweh's ever-watchful protection (v. 10<sup>b</sup>), and (2) are—not channels of Divine grace to Israel, but—(v. 14) filled themselves with Yahweh's spirit (symbolized by the 'oil,' cf. Is. lxi. 1).

In the paragraph which now follows (vv. 6<sup>b</sup>–10<sup>a</sup>), the promise to Zerubbabel will be interpreted exactly as explained above, only v. 10<sup>a</sup> will have a clearer and better sense: it will form a suitable close to the entire promise, declaring how those who once scoffed at the small beginnings of the Temple will rejoice when at length they see Zerubbabel fix the top-stone in its place. And the 'plummet' will now be, not the plummet by which the building, as course after course of stone is added to it, is kept perpendicular, but (Smith, p. 301) the plummet laid to it for the last time to test the straightness of the top-stone.

Then again I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and 5 behold, a flying roll. And he said unto me, What seest <sup>2</sup> thou? And I answered, I see a flying roll; the length thereof is twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof ten cubits. Then said he unto me, This is the curse that <sup>3</sup> goeth forth over the face of the whole land: for every one that stealeth shall be purged out <sup>a</sup> on the one side

v. The two visions described in this chapter both emphasize and develop the thought of iii. 9, the removal viz. of sin from Israel in the Messianic age.

1-4. The sixth vision. The Flying Roll. The prophet sees a large roll flying through the air. It is inscribed with curses for sins committed; and it enters the house of every thief and perjurer in the land, and destroys it. The vision is intended to symbolize the complete extermination of sinners from the Israel of the future.

1. a flying roll: viz. of skin or parchment, the material ordinarily used for writing on. The flight of the roll signified the swift coming of punishment; its flying from heaven (cf. v. 4), that the sentence proceeded from the judgement-seat above (T. T. Perowne).

2. And he said: viz. the interpreting angel (i. 9, &c.).

the length thereof, &c. The colossal size of the roll, some thirty feet long by fifteen broad, is an indication of the number of curses inscribed upon it. From the dimensions given, it is evident that it must be pictured not as wound up, but as unrolled, and forming a huge oblong sheet. The dimensions specified have no particular significance; they merely indicate that the roll is a very large one.

3, 4. The explanation of the vision. The curse goes out over the whole land, and brings punishment upon every thief and perjurer in it.

3. purged out: better, cleared or emptied out (Is. iii. 26 RVm.). Every thief and perjurer on the one side and on the other side<sup>1</sup>, i. e. wherever he may be in the land, is cleared away, or utterly destroyed, according to the curse written in the roll, when it alights upon him. The verb nikkâh is, however, more frequently used in the fig. sense of, to clear from guilt, hold guiltless, leave

<sup>1</sup> RVm. from hence is a legitimate alternative; but the repetition of הַשְּׂדֵה creates a presumption that it has the force of on this side and on that side (cf. Ex. xvii. 12; Nu. xxii. 24).

according to it; and every one that sweareth shall be 4 purged out <sup>a</sup> on the other side according to it. I will cause it to go forth, saith the LORD of hosts, and it shall enter into the house of the thief, and into the house of him that sweareth falsely by my name: and it shall abide in the midst of his house, and shall consume it with the timber thereof and the stones thereof.

unpunished; hence Now., Marti, following a suggestion of Wellhausen's, read כִּי־נִמְצָא for כִּי־נִמְצָא, and render: 'for how long hath every one that stealeth been unpunished! and how long hath every one that sweareth (falsely) been unpunished!'<sup>1</sup> i. e. crime has hitherto been practised with impunity: henceforth (v. 4) that will no longer be the case.

that sweareth. The meaning must be that sweareth falsely, even if the words 'by my name falsely' (see v. 4) have not accidentally fallen out (We., Now., Marti)<sup>2</sup>. The two sins specified correspond to the third and eighth commandments: but they are manifestly typical of transgression in general.

4. I have brought it out . . . and it shall enter, &c. Yahweh has brought it out; and it will alight with destructive effect upon every thief and perjurer in Israel. 'Perhaps in ancient times curses were written on small pieces of parchment, and committed to the wind, that they might alight upon the houses of those against whom they were directed' (Smend).

shall abide, &c. It will take up its abode there, till it has effected the purpose for which it was sent.

and consume it. The destruction of the tent or house is an old form of punishment (cf. Dan. ii. 5), and is equivalent to the exclusion of the offender and his family from the community to which they belong (We.).

5-11. The seventh vision. The Woman in the Barrel. The prophet sees an Ephah, in which, as shortly appears, a woman, the personification of wickedness, is seated. Two winged women then come forward, carry away the Ephah, and deposit it in Babylonia. The vision supplements the preceding one, declaring that not only the sinner, but wickedness, the living principle of sin, is to be permanently banished from the Israel of the future.

Then the angel that talked with me went forth, and <sup>5</sup> said unto me, Lift up now thine eyes, and see what is this that goeth forth. And I said, What is it? And <sup>6</sup> he said, This is the ephah that goeth forth. He said moreover, This is their <sup>a</sup>resemblance in all the land: (and behold, there was lifted up a <sup>b</sup>talent of lead :) and <sup>7</sup> this is a woman sitting in the midst of the ephah. And <sup>8</sup> he said, This is Wickedness; and he cast her down into

and see, &c. The word 'ephah' has probably fallen out ; and it is better to read, and see this ephah that cometh forth, viz. into the prophet's field of vision. The ephah was equivalent to about seven gallons ; it was consequently of considerable size. From v. 7 it appears that it had a circular lid ; so that it may naturally be supposed to have been shaped like a barrel.

6. Read (for the whole verse) : And I said, What is it? And he said, This is their iniquity in all the land. The angel's first answer,—at least, if the emended text of v. 5 is accepted,—is tautologous ; and, in any case, the double answer is awkward and improbable. The ephah, the angel says, contains the whole iniquity of the land. The Hebrew text, resemblance (lit. eye, fig. appearance, Nu. xi. 7 ; Lev. xiii. 55), is understood to mean (Keil), This is the appearance which the wicked in the whole land will present, after the roll of curses (vv. 1-4) has passed over it ; they will all, as it were, be concentrated in the ephah. But this explanation is very forced ; and it is far better to read, with LXX, their iniquity (עֲוֹנוֹתָם) for their eye (עֵינָם).

a talent of lead. Or, more clearly, a round plate of lead, which, as the sequel shows, proved to be the lid or cover of the ephah. As the text stands, the first part of the verse is a parenthesis describing what took place, and the second part continues the angel's words in v. 5, describing what he saw, as soon as the circular plate of lead was lifted off the top of the ephah. But probably we should read, with LXX (without the parenthesis), And behold, a round plate of lead was lifted up ; and lo, a woman sitting, &c. The talent was called a 'round' from its shape.

8. The woman is said to be Wickedness, i. e. she represents and personifies the entire wickedness of the land. As she apparently the midst of the ephah: and he cast the weight of lead 9 upon the mouth thereof. Then lifted I up mine eyes, and saw, and behold, there came forth two women, and the wind was in their wings; now they had wings like the wings of a stork: and they lifted up the ephah 10 between the earth and the heaven. Then said I to the angel that talked with me, Whither do these bear the 11 ephah? And he said unto me, To build her an house in the land of Shinar: and when it is <sup>a</sup> prepared, she shall be set there <sup>b</sup> in her own place.

raises herself up, and seeks to escape from the ephah, she is thrust back by the angel, and the heavy leaden top is forced down upon her.

the weight. Lit. 'the stone,' stones having been originally used as weights. So Dt. xxv. 13, 15 Heb., Prov. xi. 1 Heb.

9. Two women, with large outspread wings, inflated with the wind, i. e. adapted and ready to travel swiftly, appear, and lift up the ephah, preparatory to carrying it away. No meaning attaches to the number 'two,' any more than to the 'wings' of the women: the ephah, with its heavy cover, would naturally require more than one person to lift it up.

like the wings of a stork. The stork is a migratory bird, with powerful wings, capable of flying over long distances: every spring, on their return to Palestine (Jer. viii. 7), they appear in great numbers flying high up in the sky (Tristram, NHB. 246).

10, 11. In answer to his inquiry, the prophet is told that the ephah is to be transported to Babylonia, where it is to find a permanent resting-place. The meaning obviously is, that sin, which has hitherto been so active in Judah and wrought there so much ruin, is henceforth to be banished permanently to Babylonia, the country of Israel's deadly foe, and the proper home of all that is evil.

in her own place. Hardly an improvement upon AV. upon her own base. The word used means a fixed resting-place: it is used of the bases of the ten lavers (1 K. vii. 27), or of the base of an altar (Ezr. iii. 3). The ephah, when the 'house' in Babylonia is ready for it, is to be deposited in it, on its proper stand or base.

And again I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and behold, 6 there came four chariots out from between <sup>a</sup> two mountains; and the mountains were mountains of brass. In the first chariot were red horses; and in the second <sup>2</sup> chariot black horses; and in the third chariot white <sup>3</sup> horses; and in the fourth chariot grisled <sup>b</sup> bay horses.

vi. 1-3. The eighth vision. The Four Chariots. The prophet sees four chariots, with horses of different colour in each, coming forth from between two mountains of bronze. They represent the four winds of heaven; and they come forth with their commissions from the presence of the Almighty. They are destined for different quarters of the earth, to check, viz., or to overthrow, any power which might threaten Judah, wherever it might be; and one chariot is commissioned in particular to execute Yahweh's anger upon the 'north' country (Babylonia).

1. two mountains. The Heb. has, the two mountains. The reference may be to two mountains which the prophet had already noticed in his visions, though he had not before mentioned them in his descriptions. They are to be pictured (v. 5) as near the abode of God: Marti compares Enoch xviii. 6-10.

of brass. Rather, of bronze,—which, indeed, was what was meant by 'brass,' when AV. was made (Wright's Bible Word-book, s. v.).

2, 3. The differently coloured horses in each of the chariots. It does not seem that any significance attaches to the particular colours; they are rather simply intended to distinguish the chariots which were to proceed to different quarters of the earth. At most, black might be chosen with reference to the dark north (v. 6).

3. grisled. Rather, dappled or spotted. The same word is used in Gen. xxxi. 10, 12 of goats, where it is also misrendered grisled. Grisled (now spelt grizzled) is an archaism, meaning grey (Fr. gris).

bay. The Heb. word can only be rendered 'strong.' There must be some error in the text: for the descriptions of the horses in vv. 2, 3 and vv. 6, 7 do not agree, as they should do: the 'red' horses are wanting in vv. 6, 7, while the 'dappled strong' ones, which are in one chariot in v. 3, are distributed between two chariots in vv. 6 end, 7: 'strong,' moreover, though tolerable in 4 Then I answered and said unto the angel that talked 5 with me, What are these, my lord? And the angel answered and said unto me, These are the four <sup>a</sup>winds of heaven, which go forth from <sup>b</sup>standing before the 6 Lord of all the earth. The chariot wherein are the black horses goeth forth toward the north country; and the white went forth after them; and the grisled went forth 7 toward the south country. And the <sup>c</sup>bay went forth, and sought to go that they might walk to and fro through

v. 3, is unsuitable in v. 7, where evidently the name of some colour is desiderated. No doubt the Syriac is right in omitting 'strong' in v. 3, and in reading 'red' (אדום) for 'strong' (אמץ) in v. 7.

4-6. The explanation of the vision.

5. from standing before. Better, as marg., from presenting themselves before: i. e. from appearing before Him, to report themselves, or receive His commands: cf. Jos. xxiv. 1; Job i. 6, ii. 1. For the winds, as Yahweh's agents, executing His behests, cf. Ps. civ. 4 ('Who maketh winds his messengers'), cxlviii. 8. We., Now., Marti, however, adding a letter, read, 'These are going forth towards (Dan. viii. 8, xi. 4) the four winds of heaven, from standing,' &c.; in this case, of course, the chariots no longer represent the four winds, though they are still Yahweh's symbolic messengers (cf. i. 8 ff.).

6. toward the north country. Babylonia. See on ii. 6.

after them. Following them into Babylonia, as though this needed two chariots, to be dealt with effectually. The Heb. is, however, peculiar; and we expect another direction to be specified. Perhaps (We., Now.) after them (אחריהם) is a corruption of to the east country (אל ארץ הדרום).

7. the bay. Read, the red (chestnut), as v. 2<sup>a</sup>: cf. on v. 3.

and sought to go, &c. The red horses display impatience to course through the earth in every direction; and they are commissioned accordingly to do this. The meaning is generally understood to be that no definite direction is assigned to them, in order that they may be ready to attack any new power which may arise to threaten Israel, wherever it may show itself. But again it is difficult to avoid suspecting the text: v. 5 implies that the four chariots are intended to go forth towards the four quarters of the earth; and We., Now., Marti may well be right in reading the earth: and he said, Get you hence, walk to and fro through the earth. So they walked to and fro through the earth. Then cried he upon me, and spake unto me, 8 saying, Behold, they that go toward the north country have quieted my spirit in the north country.

And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, 9 Take of them of the captivity, even of Heldai, of 10

(after 'south country' at the end of v. 6) ' ; and the red went forth toward the west country. And they sought to go,' &c. The subject in 'they sought' will now be the horses in all the four chariots: they were all alike impatient to start on their mission; and they are all dispatched accordingly. For 'walk to and fro,' i. e. to patrol, cf. i. 10.

8. The interpreting angel calls the prophet's attention to what has been done by the horses dispatched into the north country.

cried upon me. An archaism for 'cried to me,' still current colloquially in Scotland. See the Additional Note on p. 226.

have quieted my spirit, &c., i. e. have pacified my anger ('spirit,' as Jud. viii. 3 RVm., Eccl. x. 4), by pouring it forth upon Babylonia. Cf. for the expression Ez. v. 13 'And my anger shall be accomplished, and I will satisfy (lit. 'quiet') my fury upon them, and I will be comforted' (viz. by thus disburdening myself), xvi. 42 'And I will satisfy (lit. 'quiet') my fury upon thee . . . and I will be at rest, and will be no more vexed.' For the thought of judgement imminent specially upon Babylonia, the centre of the anti-theocratic power of the world, see ii. 7-9; and cf. v. 11.

9-15. Historical appendix. A crown to be made, as it seems, for Zerubbabel: he and Joshua will rule harmoniously side by side in the Messianic future. A deputation from the Jews still in Babylon had just arrived in Jerusalem with gifts, intended probably as a contribution towards the restoration of the Temple; and the prophet is commanded to take from these gifts enough silver and gold to make a crown (or crowns), either—as can hardly be doubted—for Zerubbabel alone, or for Zerubbabel and Joshua, the civil and religious heads of the community (cf. chaps. iii, iv). Zerubbabel will successfully complete the building of the Temple (cf. iv. 9); and he and Joshua will then rule, the one as Messianic king, and the other as priest at his side, in perfect concord with each other.

10. of them of the captivity. Or, of the gōlā (the company of exiles). The term regularly applied to the Jews resident in Babylonia (Ez. i. 1; Ezr. i. 11, &c.). Heldai, Tobijah, and Zephaniah formed the deputation.

Tobijah, and of Jedaiah; and come thou the same day, and go into the house of Josiah the son of Zephaniah, 11 whither they are come from Babylon; yea, take of them silver and gold, and make <sup>a</sup> crowns, and set them upon the head of Joshua the son of Jehozadak, the high and come thou, &c. More exactly, 'and come thou (emph.) in that day, and come into the house of Josiah the son of Zephaniah, into which they are come from Babylon,' or, more naturally, 'who are come from Babylon.' The Hebrew, as the literal rendering at once shows, is awkward; the verb take, also, at the beginning of the verse, has no object, nor has any 'day' been mentioned to which in that day might refer. In view of the difficulties of the passage, though the correction may seem violent, there is much to be said in favour of the proposal (We., Now., Marti) to read (after 'and of Jedaiah'), 'and of Josiah the son of Zephaniah, who are come from Babylon'; אֶת־בֵּית־יְהוֹשֻׁעַ being omitted, וּמֵאֵת being a corruption of וּמִן ('and from'), and אֶת־בֵּית being two corrupt repetitions of it.

11. crowns. The Hebrew word is plural; it may, however, denote a single 'crown' (RVm.; cf. v. 14), the plural referring to the several circlets of which it might be composed. The pronoun after set is not expressed in the Hebrew: so of course either them or it may be supplied. Whether one or two crowns are actually meant must thus depend upon the view taken of the sequel.

upon the head of Joshua, &c. The text here must be in some way or other at fault. In the first place, the words at the end of v. 13, 'and the counsel of peace shall be between them both,' makes it evident that two personages must have been referred to in the preceding verses; and secondly, the 'crown'—or, if there were two crowns, one of them—is evidently intended for the 'Shoot,' or Messianic king (iii. 8), of vv. 12, 13, to whom the principal promises here given are addressed, whereas in the text as it stands it is placed on the head of the high-priest Joshua. It seems, therefore, that one of two corrections must be made. We must either (Ewald, Hitz., Stade) read in v. 11<sup>b</sup>, 'and set them upon the head of Zerubbabel, and upon the head of Joshua,' or (We., Now., Smith, Marti) omit v. 11<sup>b</sup> (from 'and set') altogether,—in either case, at the beginning of v. 12, reading 'unto them' (i. e. the persons mentioned in v. 10) for 'unto him.' The crown—or (Ewald) the principal crown—was intended originally for Zerubbabel, upon whom Haggai had already (ii. 23) bestowed Messianic promises, and who Zechariah (see below, comparing the man whose name is (the) Shoot. See on iii. 8.

and he will shoot forth out of his place: i. e. he will flourish and prosper (Jer. xxiii. 5), the figure being suggested by the name 'Shoot.' 'Out of his place' is lit. 'from underneath himself,' 'underneath oneself' being a Hebrew idiom for 'where one stands' (see on Hab. iii. 16); cf. Ex. x. 23 'and no one rose up from underneath himself' (= from his place). The Hebrew is, however, ambiguous, and might also be rendered as on RVm. (so We., Now., Marti); the meaning then being that he will become the founder of a flourishing dynasty (cf. Jer. xxxiii. 15-17, esp. v. 17). But it is doubtful whether the prophet looks beyond Zerubbabel himself.

and he shall build: i. e. Zerubbabel; see iv. 9. But the clause is superfluous by the side of the following clause (which, it may be observed, begins with the emphatic וְהוּא 'and he'), and is very probably nothing but a faulty anticipation of it.

13. 'And he (emph.) shall build Yahweh's Temple; and he (again emph.) shall bear majesty.' The word rendered 'majesty' (דָּוָר) denotes properly the majesty of a king: see Jer. xxii. 18 end (EVV. 'glory'); Ps. xxi. 5 and civ. 1 (EVV., weakly, 'honour': render rather 'majesty and state'); 1 Chr. xxix. 25 (EVV. 'majesty').

the temple. This can mean only the literal Temple (cf. v. 14<sup>b</sup>): the explanation (Keil, al.) that the spiritual Temple—the community, or Church of God (Eph. ii. 21)—is meant, is inconsistent with the context, besides giving the word 'Temple' a sense unknown to the O. T., and one which it only acquired after Eph. ii. 21<sup>b</sup> had been written (where it comes in naturally as the climax of the Apostle's figure, vv. 20, 21<sup>a</sup>). But no doubt the

and he shall sit (1 K. ii. 12), &c.: Zerubbabel is pictured as a king ruling in state upon his throne.

and he shall be a priest, &c. This cannot be right: the closing words of the verse, 'between them both,' shows that two persons must have been mentioned previously<sup>1</sup>. The least change that can be adopted must be, therefore, to read with RVm. 'and there shall be a priest upon his throne,' with reference to Joshua; but it is more than possible that Joshua was once named here explicitly, and that we should read, with Ew., Stade, We., Now., Smith, and Marti, 'and Joshua shall be priest upon his throne [or, with LXX, Stade, We., Now., Smith, Marti, 'shall be priest on his right hand,'—'upon his throne' being repeated accidentally by error from the previous line]; and there shall be counsel of peace between them both,' i. e. Joshua will be priest beside Zerubbabel, and there will be complete harmony between them both; the civil and religious heads of the community will consult together harmoniously for the welfare of their people. Are the closing words an indication that rivalries had already begun to spring up between them? 'The (later) hegemony of the priesthood cast its shadow before' (Marti).

14. The crown (or crowns) to be preserved afterwards in the Temple in memory of the donors (v. 10).

the crowns. The plural will be right if both Zerubbabel and Joshua were mentioned in v. 11, the singular crown (RVm.) if there was originally no name in v. 11<sup>b</sup>, and the 'crown' mentioned in v. 11<sup>a</sup> was intended really for Zerubbabel (vv. 12, 13<sup>a</sup>).

Helem. The Syr. has Heldai, no doubt rightly: see v. 10.

Hen. Apparently a corrupt and mutilated fragment of Josiah, v. 10. In the abstract, we might render (cf. RVm.), and for the favour of the son of Zephaniah,—with reference to his hospitable temple of the LORD. And they that are far off shall <sup>15</sup> come and build in the temple of the LORD, and ye shall know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto you. And this shall come to pass, if ye will diligently obey the voice of the LORD your God.

reception (v. 10, as rendered in RV.) of the deputation from Babylonia; but such a rendering is not here probable; Hen can only be taken naturally as a proper name, and if so it can scarcely be anything but a corruption of 'Josiah' (v. 10).

Zerubbabel and Joshua may be regarded naturally as types of Christ, the Messianic expectations which Zechariah attached to them being fulfilled afterwards, in a larger sense, by Him.

15. The building of the temple will progress rapidly: 'far-off ones,'—Jews from a distance, and perhaps (cf. Hag. ii. 7; Zech. viii. 22) Gentiles as well,—will come and assist in the work; and its completion will be evidence to the people of Judah that the prophet has been sent by Yahweh (cf. ii. 11, iv. 9<sup>b</sup>). The thought may have been suggested to the prophet by the interest shown in the Temple by the exiles who had sent gifts for it from Babylonia.

build in. Or, 'build at,' i.e. assist in building: the prep., as Neh. iv. 4 Heb. [EVV. iv. 10].

and this shall come to pass, &c. There is no 'this' in the Hebrew. The words must be rendered as in other exactly similar cases (Dt. xi. 13, xxviii. 1; Jer. xvii. 24): And it shall come to pass, if ye shall hearken diligently to the voice of Yahweh your God.... Some promise must have originally followed; but it has been torn away: the prophecy in its present form ends in the middle of a sentence.

PART III (chs. vii-viii).

Yahweh's promises, and demands, for the future.

'The visions have revealed the removal of the guilt of the land, the restoration of Israel to their standing before God, the revival of the great national institutions, and God's will to destroy the heathen forces of the world. With the Temple built, Israel should again be in the position which she enjoyed before the Exile. Zechariah, therefore, proceeds to exhort the people to put away the fasts which the Exile had made necessary, and address themselves, as of old, to the virtues and duties of the civic life' (G. A. Smith, p. 320). He reminds them how their forefathers, to their cost, had neglected those duties (cf. i. 4-6); but now, if they will observe them faithfully, he assures them of Yahweh's that the word of the LORD came unto Zechariah in the 2 fourth day of the ninth month, even in Chislev. <sup>a</sup> Now they of Beth-el had sent Sharezer and Regem-melech, 3 and their men, to intreat the favour of the LORD, and to speak unto the priests of the house of the LORD of hosts, and to the prophets, saying, Should I weep in the fifth month, separating myself, as I have done these so blessing, he describes the felicity which they will enjoy, and he ends with a picture of heathen nations eagerly pressing forward to share their blessings.

vii. 1-3. The occasion of the following prophecy. In 518, two years after the work of rebuilding the Temple had been resumed, a deputation came to Jerusalem to inquire of the priests and prophets there whether the fasts which had been observed during the years of exile should still be continued.

1. Chislev: i. e. Dec.-Jan.

2. The text is highly suspicious, though it cannot be restored with certainty. Sharezer is an Assyrian name (see Is. xxxvii. 38), and must have been given to its bearer in Babylon: it means 'Protect the king,' the name of the deity addressed<sup>1</sup> being either omitted or having dropped out. Not improbably it is concealed in the preceding 'Beth-el'; and we should read, for instance, 'And Belsharézzer and Regem-melech and his men [so the Heb.] sent to intreat,' &c., or, with greater changes in the Heb., but better sense, 'And Belsharézzer sent Regem-melech and his men' (We., Now.), or 'And B. and R. sent men' (Cheyne, Marti).

to intreat Yahweh's favour. Whether by supplication (Ex. xxxii. 11; 1 K. xiii. 6; Jer. xxvi. 19); or sacrifice, 1 S. xiii. 12, and probably here.

3. Shall I weep. The 'I' represents the community: the senders were probably men of some position in it.

the fifth month. The tenth of the fifth month was observed as a fast in memory of the burning of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans in 586 (Jer. lii. 12, 13).

separating myself. Better, abstaining, viz. from food and drink.

many years? Then came the word of the LORD of hosts 4 unto me, saying, Speak unto all the people of the land, 5 and to the priests, saying, When ye fasted and mourned in the fifth and in the seventh month, even these seventy years, did ye at all fast unto me, even to me? And when 6 ye eat, and when ye drink, <sup>a</sup> do not ye eat for yourselves, and drink for yourselves? Should ye not hear the words 7 which the LORD hath cried by the former prophets, when Jerusalem was inhabited and in prosperity, and

Yahweh's answer, which now begins, falls into three parts (v. 8 being omitted: see the note), each introduced by the words, And Yahweh's word came to me, vv. 4-14, viii. 1-17, 18-23.

4-7. Your fasting has had so little reference to Yahweh, that He cares not whether you fast or not: what He demands, as He often told your fathers by the older prophets, is a spiritual service, the service of the heart.

5. and mourned. Rather, and wailed,—with loud demonstrations of grief, in the Eastern fashion. This is the regular meaning of sāphad: cf. Mic. i. 8 'I will make a wailing like the jackals,' with palpable reference to the cries of the wailers.

in the fifth month. See on v. 3.

and in the seventh month. In memory of the murder of Gedaliah, whom Nebuchadnezzar had made governor of Judah, by fanatic Jews at Mizpah (see 2 K. xxv. 23, 25, or more fully Jer. xl. 5, 7, &c., xli. 1, 2):

even. The word (Heb. ו, i. e. 'and') is better omitted.

did ye at all fast unto me? It was a merely external observance, as little expressive of or conducive to the temper in which I delight as your eating and drinking are (v. 6). Cf. Is. lviii. 3-5.

6. do ye not, &c. Lit. 'are not ye the eaters, and ye the drinkers?' i. e. the act is limited entirely to yourselves, it in no way affects me. Cf. 1 Cor. viii. 8.

7. (Should ye) not (hear). This is a good deal to supply; the LXX read preferably, Are not these the words, &c. (אמא for אמא; cf. viii. 16). The meaning is, This,—i. e. Yahweh's indifference to a merely external ceremonial, apart from the moral and spiritual feelings of which it should be the expression,—is the gist of what the older prophets so often preached (e. g. Is. lviii. 6-12, on fasting; also Is. i. 10-17; Am. v. 21-24, &c.).

widow, nor the fatherless, the stranger, nor the poor;

was inhabited. Lit. 'sat,' in accordance with the idiom explained on ii. 4. So were inhabited, at the end of the verse.

the South. Or, the Negeb, a district in the south of Judah, often mentioned (cf. Gen. xii. 9 RVm.), the cities of which are enumerated in Jos. xv. 21-32 (see 'NEGEB' in DB.).

the lowland. Or, the Shephélah, the technical name of another district of Judah (Jos. xv. 33-44), comprising the low hills and flat valley land stretching down towards the Philistine plain in the W. and SW. of Judah (see 'PLAIN' 7 in DB.). Cf. Jer. xiii. 19, xxxii. 44, xxxiii. 13.

8-14. A summary of the teaching of the 'former prophets,' vv. 9-10, followed by a description of the manner in which the people turned a deaf ear to it, and were visited by Yahweh in consequence with disaster and exile, vv. 11-14.

8, 9. As the text stands, the reference to the teaching of the former prophets is the subject of a fresh revelation from Yahweh. But the connexion of this passage is greatly improved if we adopt, with Now., Smith, and Marti, We.'s illuminative suggestion to omit v. 8, as the gloss of a scribe who did not notice that vv. 9<sup>b</sup>, 10 contained God's teaching by the former prophets: we then get, 'These are the words which Yahweh hath cried by the former prophets, when Jerusalem was inhabited, &c. . .'; and then the words spoken by them immediately follow, <sup>9</sup> 'Thus saith Yahweh of hosts, Execute true judgement,' &c.

9. Execute true judgement. Lit. 'Judge judgement of truth.' The expression judgement of truth occurs elsewhere only Ez. xviii. 8; but the principle here inculcated is insisted on repeatedly, from the ancient 'Book of the Covenant,' Ex. xxiii. 6-8, onwards, e. g. Am. v. 12, 16; Is. i. 17, v. 23; Dt. xvi. 19, 20.

shew mercy (or kindness) and compassion, &c. Cf. Hos. vi. 6; Mic. vi. 8.

10. The oppression of 'the widow, the fatherless, and the stranger' (lit. 'the sojourner,' i. e. the foreigner, settled more or less temporarily in Israel, but possessing no legal status there) is repeatedly prohibited: Ex. xxii. 21, 22; Dt. xxiv. 17; Is. i. 17; Jer. vii. 6, &c.

nor the poor. Cf. Am. viii. 4; Is. iii. 14-15, x. 2.

4, 5. The happiness and long life (cf. Is. lxxv. 20) of the future inhabitants of Jerusalem. An 'immortal picture, old men and women sitting in the sun, boys and girls playing in all the open places' (Smith, pp. 324 f.); perhaps (ibid.) drawn as a contrast to the rough and hard life of the restored community, which gave little encouragement to marriage, and allowed few to reach gray hairs.

I. e. for the produce or harvest (Job xxxix. 12) of peace will now be assured, the following clauses describing in what this produce or harvest is to consist. But the text is suspicious: 'dew' cannot well be included under 'seed'; and such an abrupt sentence is not in accordance with usual Hebrew style. It is best, probably, to read with We., Smith, Now. (ed. 2), Marti, 'For I will sow peace' (וְעַתָּה אֶשְׂרֹם : the LXX, though paraphrasing, have a verb, 'I will show'). The figure may have been suggested by Hos. ii. 23 (though the object there is not 'peace').

Jer. xxix. 22), so now they will be so blessed by God that their names will be used, as types of happiness, in benedictions (cf. Gen. xlviii. 20 RVm.).

tribes of the northern kingdom as well. The prospect is an ideal one, such as is often drawn by the prophets : Jer. iii. 12-15, 18, xxxi. 4-9, 27 ; Ez. xxxvii. 15 ff. ; Is. xi. 12-14 ; Zech. x. 6, 7.

a blessing. Both blessed yourselves (Gen. xii. 2 : cf. Ps. xxi. 6 RVm.), and also an example, or type, of blessedness, in the eyes of others.

let your hands be strong. The paragraph ends with the same word of encouragement as that with which it began (v. 9).

14-17. The people have nothing to fear, if only (vv. 16-17) they observe the moral conditions which Yahweh imposes.

14, 15. to do evil . . . to do good. Contrast Dt. xxviii. 63 ; Jer. xxxi. 28.

judge truth, and the judgement of peace (RVm.) : i. e. judgement leading to peace, as opposed to unrighteous judgement, such as leads only to dissatisfaction and discord.

in your gates. Or, gateways, with seats along the sides, where persons often met for conversation or business, and where justice was also often administered : see e. g. Dt. xxv. 7 ; Ruth iv. 1, 11 ; Am. v. 15 ; Is. xxix. 21 ; Job v. 4 ; Ps. cxxvii. 5.

18-19. Now at last comes the direct answer to the original question (vii. 3), out of which the entire prophecy arose : Do

19. On the ninth day of the fourth month, a breach was made in the walls of Jerusalem, Zedekiah and his men of war fled, and the Chaldaeans entered the city (2 K. xxv. 3-5 = Jer. lii. 6-8); on the tenth day of the fifth month, the city, palace, and temple were burnt (Jer. lii. 12, 13); in the seventh month, the governor Gedaliah was murdered (above, on vii. 5); on the tenth day of the tenth month (a year and a half before the day on which the breach in the walls was made) the siege of Jerusalem began (2 K. xxv. 1 = Jer. lii. 4).

Additional Note on Zech. vi. 8.

'Cried upon' here, in the sense of 'called to,' is an isolated and somewhat curious archaism, inherited through the Geneva Version (1560), and the Great Bible (1539), from Coverdale (1534). It was presumably current in Old English; but in the instances given by Murray (1300 Cursor Mundi 6139; 1400 Destruction of Troy 6504; 1532 More, Works, ed. 1557, p. 396<sup>a</sup> 'he cryed upon them to do penaunce'; and others) it has the force of call on or appeal to. It is still, Dr. Hastings tells me, used colloquially in the sense of 'call to' in Scotland: 'A mother will say, "Your father's in the garden, cry upon him to come in."' And Jos. Wright, in his Dialect Dictionary, quotes two examples of it in the same sense from Scott: Border Minstrelsy (1802), i. 144, ed. 1806, or ii. 8, ed. 1848 in 'Jamie Telfer'), 'But fye gar cry on Willie my son,' and Redgauntlet, Letter xii, towards the end, 'If ony body stops ye, cry on me.'

ZECHARIAH IX—XIV

INTRODUCTION

ZECHARIAH ix-xiv falls into two main parts (though it is doubtful whether each part forms a single continuous prophecy), viz. (1) ix-xi, xiii. 7-9; (2) xii. 1-xiii. 6, xiv.

Contents of the two parts.

(1) (a) ix. Establishment of the Messianic kingdom. Yahweh's judgement falls upon Syria, Phoenicia, and the Philistines (vv. 1-8): their depopulated territory is incorporated in the Messianic kingdom: the Messianic king enters his capital in triumph (vv. 9-10); the Israelites still in exile, having vanquished the Greeks, return to their own land, to enjoy there the blessings of peace (vv. 11-17).

(b) x. 1-2. Ask help of Yahueh, not of the teraphim or diviners! An exhortation to pray for rain to Yahweh, and not to expect it from teraphim and diviners: trust in them leads only to misfortune.

(c) x. 3-12. The fall of the godless foreign tyrants. Yahweh will visit His flock (people), free them from their foreign rulers, and appoint them native rulers of their own (vv. 3, 4). Endued with new strength, they will thereupon vanquish their foes; the exiled Ephraimites will return; Egypt and Assyria will be humbled; and the restored nation will glory in its God (vv. 5-12).

(d) xi. 1-3. A fire devours the cedars of Lebanon; and the oaks of Bashan will soon share the same fate: shepherds bewail their desolated pastures, and lions roar because their lairs along the Jordan are destroyed. Perhaps a figurative description of the downfall of heathen rulers.

(e) xi. 4-17; xiii. 7-9. The people's rejection of the good shepherd, the substitution of a worthless shepherd, and its consequences for both. Israel has been the prey of selfish shepherds (i.e. rulers), who have made traffic with it ruthlessly. The prophet is therefore commissioned to enact the part of a good shepherd, and rule the people on Yahweh's behalf: but they resent his authority, so he leaves them to their fate (vv. 4-14). After this, in order to exhibit the consequences which their rejection of Yahweh will entail, he assumes the character of a worthless shepherd, who will plunder the people for his own aggrandizement, but who will eventually meet with a just retribution (vv. 15-17): his flock will be dispersed; and only a remnant, purified by further trial, will be preserved to form the faithful people of God (xiii. 7-9). On the probable meaning of the allegory see the notes, esp. p. 253 f.

(2) xii. 1—xiii. 6, xiv. The deliverance and glorious future of Jerusalem.—(a) xii. 1—xiii. 6. The deliverance of Jerusalem from the attack of the heathen, its penitence, and its purification from all sin and uncleanness. The prophet sees an assembly of nations advancing against Jerusalem: but Yahweh smites them with a sudden panic, the country folk of Judah are first victorious, and then they assist in saving the capital (vv. 1-9). After this triumph, the whole nation, every family by itself, from the noblest downwards, holds a great lamentation over a martyr 'whom they have pierced' (vv. 10-14). Henceforth a fountain for purification from sin is permanently opened in Jerusalem (xiii. 1); and all idolatry and degraded prophecy are exterminated from the land (xiii. 2-6).

(b) xiv. The deliverance of Jerusalem from the heathen, and its elevation into a centre of monotheism for the world. Another assault upon Jerusalem is here described. The nations this time capture the city; and half of its population is taken into captivity (v. 1 f.). Yahweh next appears, in order to fight against the assailants, and rescue the remainder: He stands upon the Mount of Olives, which is rent in sunder beneath Him, and through the chasm the fugitives escape (vv. 3-5). Thereupon the Messianic age commences: the light is perpetual, and the air serene; the territory of Judah becomes a fertile plain, Jerusalem alone retaining its former elevation, conspicuous from afar, the goal of the nations' pilgrimages, and holy entirely to Yahweh (vv. 6-21).

That Zechariah, the author of chs. i-viii, should be also the author of either chs. ix-xi, xiii. 7-9, or xii. xiii. 1-6, xiv. cannot be said to be probable, even upon internal grounds. Zechariah uses a different phraseology, evinces different interests, and moves in a different circle of ideas from those which prevail in chs. xii-xiv.

Thus Zechariah is peculiarly fond of the confirmatory formula, '(Thus) saith Yahweh' (twenty-three times), and 'came the word of Yahweh unto . . . ' (eight times); in xi-xiv we have the former only in xi. 4, the latter not at all; the parenthetic 'saith Yahweh' is also much more frequent in i-viii than in ix-xiv: on the other hand, 'in that day' (of the future), which occurs seventeen times in xii-xiv, occurs thrice only in i-viii (ii. 11, iii. 10, [vi. 10]), and only once in ix-xi (ix. 16).

In i-viii the circumstances of the author's lifetime, and the objects of his interest—the Temple, the affairs of the restored community, Judah's prospects for the future—bulk largely: in ix-xiv the circumstances and interests of the author are very different: there is nothing about the restoration of the Temple, or about Joshua and Zerubbabel; but we read of the evil rulers, foreign and native alike, who maltreat their subjects, and enrich themselves at their expense. Zechariah's pictures of the Messiah and the Messianic age are coloured quite differently from those of either ix-xi or xii-xiv (contrast iii. 8, vi. 12 f. with ix. 9 f.; and viii with xiv); and the prospects of the nation are also different: in Zechariah the outlook is one of security and peace (i. 17, 21, ii. 9-11, iii. 10, viii. 3-8, 12), in xii. 2 ff., xiv. 2 ff., war and siege are imminent, and only when these have been passed through, and Jerusalem has been captured and plundered (xiv. 2), will Judah's salvation be secured (xiv. 6 ff.). And if (see below) ix-xiv are not earlier than the Greek age, Zechariah's authorship is upon chronological grounds impossible.

When, however, we endeavour, by means of internal evidence, to fix the date of these prophecies, we are met by a difficulty. Especially ix-xi, xiii. 7-9 contains passages, some of which seem to point to a pre-exilic date, while others point to a post-exilic date. Thus, on the one hand, the kingdom of the ten tribes is spoken of in terms implying apparently that it still exists (ix. 10, xi. 14), Assyria and Egypt are mentioned side by side (x. 10, 11), just as in Hosea (vii. 11 al.); the teraphim and diviners (x. 1 f.) have been thought to point to a date before rather than after the Exile (but see Mal. iii.

5); the nations threatened in ix. 1-7 are those prominent in the age of Amos (cf. Am. i. 3, 6, 9). On the strength of these facts, many of the older critics, Ewald, Hitzig, and others, assigned ch. ix to the end of the reign of Jeroboam II, ch. x to a somewhat later date, v. 10 alluding to the deportation of the inhabitants of N. and N.E. Israel by Tiglath-pileser in 734 (2 K. xv. 29), and xi. 4-17 being interpreted as a symbolical description of Yahweh's rejection of the kingdom of the ten tribes in the troubles which followed the death of Jeroboam II. Upon this view the author would be an older contemporary of Isaiah.

On the other hand, the prophecy also contains passages which appear to imply a post-exilic date: ix. 11 f. and x. 6-9 seem to presuppose the captivity of Ephraim (B. C. 722); in ix. 8 it is said that no oppressor shall any more pass through Jerusalem; and in ix. 13 the Greeks are mentioned, not as a distant, unimportant people, such as they would be in the eighth century B. C., but as a world-power, and as Israel's most formidable antagonist, the victory over whom inaugurates the Messianic age. This position, however, was only attained by the Greeks after the overthrow of the Persian empire at Issus, in Cilicia, by Alexander the Great, B. C. 333.

Upon the whole, the arguments in favour of a post-exilic date preponderate. Not only is the manner in which the Greeks are mentioned in ix. 13 a grave objection to a pre-exilic date, but the portrait of the Messianic king seems to be original in Isaiah, so that it is scarcely possible to regard ix. 9 f. as earlier than Isaiah; and inasmuch as there are clear indications in some parts (as ix. 11, 12, xi. 4-17) that the writer for some reason veils his meaning, and speaks allegorically, a presumption arises that he may do the same elsewhere. And so the terms 'Ephraim' and 'the house of Joseph' may be explained as symbolical designations of the members of the ten tribes still in exile (the Diaspora), whose return was anticipated by the prophets long after 722 (Jer. iii. 12, xxxi. 4 ff.; Ez. xxxvii. 16 ff.); while 'Assyria,' the name of the country to which, and the people by whom, Ephraim was carried into exile, may have been used to denote the lands belonging geographically to the ancient Assyria, or their present owners, whether the Persians (cf. Ezr. vi. 22), or Alexander (if x. 10, 11 was written during his victorious campaigns, B. C. 333-323), or his successors on the throne of Syria, the Seleucidae.

If, however, we ask more particularly to what date in the Greek period the prophecy is to be assigned, it is impossible to give any confident answer: for our knowledge of Jewish history from 333 to c. 175 B. C. is too meagre to allow us to determine what the events alluded to in the prophecy are. There were, however, more occasions than one, in the half-century following the battle of Issus in 333, which, so far as we can see, might have given rise to such a prophecy.

Alexander himself, having, in 332, taken Tyre after a seven months' siege, marched along the coast of Palestine on his way to Egypt, spending two months on the way in the reduction of Gaza. There followed the ten years of Alexander's wonderful career of conquest in the East. After his death at Babylon in 323, his empire, from Macedon to the Indus, became the prey of his generals' ambitions; and Coele-Syria and Palestine, the debatable border-land between Syria and Egypt, were repeatedly invaded by rival armies and repeatedly changed hands. Syria was originally allotted to Laomedon; but Ptolemy Lagi (who had secured Egypt) in 320 sent an expedition through Palestine (in the course of which he is said to have surprised Jerusalem on a Sabbath), and annexed Syria by force of arms. In 318 Eumenes, Alexander's former secretary, who had received the satrapy of Cappadocia, easily wrested one city after another in Palestine from Ptolemy's garrisons, but was obliged to abandon them in consequence of his fleet deserting to Antigonus. In 315 Antigonus (the general who had obtained Phrygia) laid siege to Tyre, took Joppa and Gaza, and in 314, after a fifteen months' siege, reduced Tyre, and so gained possession of Palestine. In 312, however, Ptolemy defeated Antigonus' son, Demetrius, at a great battle fought near Gaza, the result of which was that he recovered Palestine as far as Tyre. But he did not retain it for long: in 311, hearing that Antigonos was advancing against him with a large army from Phrygia, he evacuated it, destroying on his retreat Acco, Joppa, Samaria, and Gaza. From 311 to 302 Palestine remained in the hands of Antigonos. In 302, however, it was again recovered by Ptolemy. After the battle of Ipsus, in Phrygia, in 301, in which Antigonos was defeated and slain by Seleucus, Ptolemy, under protest from Seleucus, still retained Palestine. In 297 or 296 Demetrius appears to have taken Samaria<sup>1</sup>.

There were also, during all these years, numerous wars between the former generals of Alexander in other parts of Asia. Amid times such as these, a prophet might well have been moved to attach his thoughts about the future to imagery such as that of the invasion of Palestine from the north in ix. 1-8, or the assault of nations upon Jerusalem in xii. 1-9, or its capture by them in xiv. 1-2, and so Stade, in his elaborate study on Zech. ix-xiv in the Zeitschr. für die alttest. Wissenschaft. for 1881, 1882, dates the prophecy (1882, pp. 293 f., 305) between 306 and 278. G. A. Smith (p. 461) agrees that this date is probable. Kuiper (Zach. ix-xiv, Utrecht, 1894, pp. 134 f., 160 f.) thinks chs. ix-x may have been written in 332 during Alexander's siege of Tyre, considering ix. 5-8 to be a prediction of his ensuing march towards Egypt, and understanding the two chapters generally as giving expression to the hopes of deliverance and restoration aroused by his successes; xi, xiii. 7-9 he thinks was written somewhat later, after these hopes had been disappointed, and the people had shown themselves unresponsive to Yahweh's demands; xii. 1-xiii. 6 and xiv describe the hopes cherished still later by the same prophet. This view is plausible: whether it is right is more than we can tell. Nowack declines to say more than that the prophecy belongs to the Greek period.

The date, in fact, cannot be fixed definitely till we know who the 'three shepherds' cut off 'in one month' are (xi. 8). Marti (see p. 254) places the prophecy as late as B.C. 160; but if this had been the date we should have expected the Hebrew style to be of a later type than it is.

Chs. xii. 1—xiii. 6, xiv (which differ from ix. 1 ff. in making no mention of the northern kingdom) were assigned by Ewald and other older critics to a prophet living shortly before the close of the kingdom of Judah, under either Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, or Zedekiah, the descriptions in xii. 2 ff. and xiv. 1 ff. being supposed to refer to the approaching capture of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans in 586, and to the escape (xiv. 2<sup>b</sup>) of a fraction of the inhabitants. But a closer study of the contents of the prophecy reveals indications, too clear to be mistaken, of its post-exilic origin. The terms in which the foe is spoken of in xii. 2 ff., xiv. 1 ff. are very different from those used by Jeremiah or Ezekiel of the Chaldeans: there is an ideal or imaginative element in the descriptions, showing that the prophet has not actual enemies in view, but that he is following Ezekiel (chs. xxxviii—xxxix) in picturing an imaginary attack of nations upon Jerusalem in the future. Such a feature has no organic connexion with the prophet's own times, but is eschatological. The prophets of the Chaldaean age dwell constantly upon the iniquities of the people: the burden of these chapters is not the need of repentance, or the judgement upon sin, but deliverance and future blessedness. The independent position assigned to the 'house of Levi,' as a whole, beside the 'house of David' (xii. 13; cf. vv. 8, 10, 12, xiii. 1) is unlike the representations of the earlier period: on the other hand, it would harmonize with post-exilic relations, when the family of David was reduced in prestige, and the priestly tribe possessed great influence in Jerusalem, the high-priest being head of the state. Hence there is no sufficient reason for attributing xii—xiii. 6, xiv to a substantially different age from ix—xi, xiii. 7—9.

Whether the six chapters are all by one hand is a difficult question, which can hardly be answered with certainty. The chapters, no doubt, all move in the same general circle of ideas: but there are at the same time considerable differences between them.

Thus in xi. 4-17, xiii. 7-9 the figure of the shepherds is the same as in x. 3, but it is worked out in a different and highly original manner; the outlook into the future in xi. 17, xiii. 7-9 is very different from that of ix. 9-17, x. 4-12, as it is also from that of xii. 1-xiii. 6: Ephraim, who is so prominent in ix-x, appears nowhere in xi-xiv, not even in the pictures of the future: the 'shepherds,' also, whether of x. 3 or of xi. 4-17, xiii. 7, are not to be found in xii. 1-xiii. 6, xiv: xiv. 1-5 is parallel in general thought to xii. 1-9, but again there are great differences; for whereas in xii. 1 ff. the assailants are dispersed before Jerusalem, in xiv. 1 f. they enter and spoil the city, and half its inhabitants go into exile: xiv. 4 f., 12-15, also, are very different from anything in xii. 3-9; and xiii. 8 f., again, differs from each of these.

Some of these differences (e.g. those between ix-x and xi. 4-17, xiii. 7-9) might no doubt be accounted for by the fact that the prophecies, even though they may be the work of the same author, were not written by him at the same time, and do not reflect the same historical situation (so Kuiper). The question must be left an open one. Stade, Marti, and G. A. Smith, though they allow that unity of authorship cannot be proved, think the differences, in view of the plastic character of the eschatological material, not far-reaching enough to imply a difference of author: Nowack, on the other hand, is of opinion that the phenomena presented by the chapters point to the conclusion that they consist of four distinct prophecies (ix. 1-xi. 3; xi. 4-17, xiii. 7-9; xii. 1-xiii. 6; xiv), the work of four different authors.

The prophecies contained in Zech. ix-xiv are thus suggested in part (ix. 1-8; x. 3 f.; xi. 4 ff.; xii. 5 and 7 (rivalry between Judah and Jerusalem); xii. 10) by the circumstances of the time, though we are not in a position to say definitely what the circumstances alluded to are.

Except, however, in xi. 4-14 (15-17?), which has a character of its own, the writer does not deal so largely with his own present, as the prophets generally do. He does not, like the older prophets (e. g. Is. i, v), attack the moral or social abuses of his time, or denounce religious backsliding, or call to repentance; he lives in the future, and we only learn indirectly, or incidentally (e. g. x. 2, xiii. 2-6), what the faults of his contemporaries are, or what reforms he would introduce among them. In xii. 2 f., xiv. 2 f., 14, the assault of 'all' nations is connected loosely with the present; it is thus (p. 233), though expected to take place shortly, an eschatological trait. In the representations given in them of the future kingdom of God, the prophecies consist largely of re-affirmations, in form adapted to the age in which they were written, of characteristic elements of older prophecies—victory over foes, Ephraim restored, the advent of the age of godliness (xiii. 9), felicity, and peace (ix. 10, 17, x. 4-12, xii. 6, &c.), the removal of idolatry and spurious prophecy (xiii. 2-6), and purification from sin (xiii. 1). Ch. xiv, moreover, anticipates a time when monotheism will prevail throughout the world, and all nations will serve Yahweh,—with the limitation, however, that the thought is expressed under the forms of the Jewish dispensation, which even the most catholic of the prophets could not conceive as entirely abolished, Jerusalem the religious centre of the world, the feast of Booths observed, and other ceremonial institutions in force (xiv. 9 f., 16, 20 f.). The ideal of Zech. ix-xiv is, in one word (Marti), 'a Judaized world-empire, with the Prince of Peace ruling in Jerusalem.'

ZECHARIAH IX—XIV

- 9 [A<sup>1</sup>] The <sup>a</sup>burden of the word of the LORD upon the land of Hadrach, and Damascus shall be its resting place:

ix-xi, xiii. 7-9. This prophecy falls into two main parts: (1) ix-x a symbolic picture of the overthrow of the heathen, and establishment of the kingdom of God; (2) xi. 4-14, xiii. 7-9 Israel's misgovernment by certain evil 'shepherds,' and the consequences for both it and them. The interpretation of xi. 1-3 is uncertain (see the notes). As shown in the Introduction, the prophecy is almost certainly later than B. C. 333, the year of Alexander's victory over the Persians at Issus, and reflects some part, or parts, of the anxious and often troubled years which began then for Palestine: but our very meagre knowledge of the internal history of Judah during this period (till c. 175) prevents us from fixing the date more precisely.

1-8. Yahweh's judgement upon Syria, Phoenicia, and the Philistines, enabling the depopulated territory to be made a province in the Messianic kingdom (v. 9 ff.). The tide of invasion sweeps on from the North, over Syria, Phoenicia, and Palestine, destroying all before it (vv. 1-6); the few survivors are cleansed from their iniquities, and incorporated in Judah, which is protected by its God (vv. 7, 8).

1. The oracle (or utterance: see on Nah. i. 1) of Yahweh's word. A peculiar combination, recurring only xii. 1, Mal. i. 1; see p. 285 n. Here the expression is the more peculiar, from what is elsewhere the title of a prophecy forming part of a sentence. Stade and Marti, supposing 'Yahweh' to have fallen out, would read, 'The oracle of Yahweh's word. Yahweh is in the land of Hadrach, and Damascus is his resting place' (Ps. cxxxii. 8), i. e. Yahweh is in these two countries, and holds them, as conquests, for His people (cf. v. 10<sup>b</sup>). For the idea, if the text be kept as it is, of Yahweh's word (of judgement) 'resting,' or alighting, upon a country; cf. Is. ix. 8.

Hadrach. The name of a country mentioned in the Assyrian Inscriptions, sometimes beside Damascus and Hamath, sometimes beside Zobah, Zemar and Arka (Gen. x. 17), and hence certainly

for the eye, &c. The rendering of RV., though unexceptionable grammatically, cannot be right: for the sense which it yields is incongruous with the context. If the text is correct, RVm. must be followed, the meaning then being that Yahweh has an eye upon all mankind to render to every one according to his doings (cf. Jer. xxxii. 19: in v. 20, also, Israel and 'men' generally are opposed as here). The obj. gen. ('eye of man' = 'eye upon man') is, however, forced; and perhaps we should read, with Klost., Marti, 'For to Yahweh belong the cities of Aram (Syria) and all the tribes of Israel' (עַן יִרְדָּה לַיהוָה עָרֵי אֲרָם). The 'tribes of Israel' are mentioned because, as 'Ephraim' in the sequel shows (v. 10 &c.), the writer has here in view the nation in its ideal completeness.

2. Hamath, Tyre, and Zidon, also, will now become part of Yahweh's domain. The verse carries on either 'and Damascus' in v. 1, or, if Klost.'s emendation be adopted, 'the cities of Aram,' &c.

thereon: i. e. on Damascus. Hāmāth (now Hamā) was an important city, with its own king, often mentioned in the Assyrian Inscriptions, and also in the O. T. esp. as fixing the ideal N. limit of Israelitish territory (Nu. xxxiv. 8; Ez. xlvii. 17; cf. 1 K. viii. 65, Am. vi. 14). It was some distance to the N. of Lebanon, and about 120 miles N. of Damascus. It is still a place of considerable size.

very wise: viz., as v. 3 explains, in the worldly arts of constructing fortifications and amassing wealth. Cf. Ez. xxviii. 3.

3, 4. Tyre, in spite of its strength and wealth, is doomed by Yahweh to destruction. Tyre, after a seven months' siege, was taken by Alexander in 332, and its inhabitants were either slain or sold into slavery. If the prophecy was really written as early as Kuiper supposes (p. 232) this will be the approaching conquest of Tyre referred to.

heaped up, &c. With allusion to the gains made in trade. 'Dust' and 'mire' are figures of abundance (Job xxvii. 16). For a graphic picture of the commerce of Tyre, see Ez. xxvii.

4. power. Or, substance, riches; see Ez. xxviii. 4, 5, where the same word is thrice so rendered. Or, if חיל were taken, as it very well might be, as merely a variant spelling for חל, the meaning would be rampart (see Nah. iii. 8),—will smite her rampart into the sea (RVm.).

and she. The pron. is emphatic: and she herself.

5. The alarm of the Philistines at the fall of the strongholds of Phœnicia: with a foe advancing from the north, the main impediment to his march southwards would thus be removed, and their own turn might be expected next. Four of the five Philistine cities (1 S. vi. 17 f.) are mentioned, the one omitted being Gath, which is passed by also in Am. i. 6, 8, Zeph. ii. 4, Jer. xxv. 20.

her expectation. Or, her hope: properly, that to which she looked (viz. for help), the same word which is used, in the same sense, in Is. xx. 5, 6 (of Cush, as the political hope of Judah). What is meant is Tyre (vv. 3, 4), to which, after the subjugation of Syria (vv. 1, 2), the cities of Philistia would look to check the further advance of the invader.

6. Render either, And a bastard race (or half-breeds) shall dwell, or, And a bastard (or half-breed) shall sit (as king); for 'bastard' may be meant either collectively or individually, and yāshab may mean either dwell, or sit (enthroned, or as king), Ps. xxix. 10, Am. i. 5 RVm.; the former rendering is the more probable. Mameēr (Dt. xxiii. 2) means, according to the Rabbis, the issue of an incestuous marriage: here, however, it probably denotes more generally half-breeds (Smith), LXX ἀλλογενεῖς, with reference to the refuse population, apt to collect in forsaken towns or villages (the choice of the word may have been suggested by Neh. xiii. 23 f.). The verse will then depict the utter humiliation

<sup>a</sup> dwell in Ashdod, and I will cut off the pride of the Philistines. And I will take away his blood out of his <sup>7</sup> mouth, and his abominations from between his teeth; and he also shall be a remnant for our God: and he shall be as a chieftain in Judah, and Ekron as a Jebusite. And <sup>8</sup> of Philistia (cf. v. 6<sup>b</sup>): its native population gone, and their place taken by miserable half-breeds. That each city has its own particular doom is of course merely a trait in the poetical representation: the judgements, each and all, must be thought of as affecting the whole population.

the pride, &c.: i. e. their political independence.

7. The half-breeds thus occupying the Philistine territory will be cleansed from their idolatry, and incorporated as Yahweh-worshippers in the community of Judah. The pronouns he, his, refer to the half-breed race as a whole.

his blood. Alluding to heathen or idolatrous sacrifices, which were eaten (cf. Nu. xxv. 2) 'with the blood' (Ez. xxxiii. 25), as opposed to the legitimate Israelitish sacrifices, which, when partaken of by the worshippers, as in the case of the 'peace offerings,' were scrupulously drained of blood (1 S. xiv. 32 f.; Lev. xvii. 11, 14 al.).

abominations. Better (see DB. s. v. 'ABOMINATION'), detestable things: here either (cf. clause a) of the flesh of heathen sacrifices,—עֲוֹנוֹת being often used, especially in Deuteronomic writers and Ezekiel (e. g. 1 K. xi. 5, 7, Ez. v. 11), of heathen gods,—or of rites and objects connected with their worship; or perhaps of the flesh of animals ceremonially 'unclean' (Lev. xi), cf. nearly the same word (עֲוֹנוֹת) in Lev. xi. 10, 11, 12, 13, &c.

and he also, &c. Even this mixed population will yield a 'remnant' to become worshippers of Yahweh. Isaiah's doctrine of the 'remnant' (see on Zeph. iii. 11) is applied here to the inhabitants of Philistia.

as a chieftain. Rather, as a clan-chief; the Heb. word being the one used of the tribal or clan-chiefs of Edom in Gen. xxxvi. 15-19, Ex. xv. 15, where it is rendered 'duke' (i. e. dux, LXX ἡγούμενος), and the meaning being that the survivors just mentioned will acquire then the dignity of a clan-chief in Judah. It is better, however, changing merely the points, to read as a clan (for the word, see Jud. vi. 15 EVV. family; Mic. v. 2 RVm. families): the meaning will then be that the survivors who become worshippers of Yahweh will be incorporated in Judah, and take in it the same rank as a native Judahite clan, while a Philistine city, such as Ekron, will rank with the Jebusites or inhabitants of Jerusalem itself.

Jebusite. An archaism for Jerusalemite,—the 'Jebusites' being the old inhabitants of Jerusalem until expelled by David (2 S. v. 6 ff.).

8. But Yahweh will protect His temple, and Jerusalem, that no hostile army, or oppressor, assail them any more.

about. Rather, for (the protection of).

against the army. There is no art. in the Hebrew: render rather, that there be no army, (even) none passing by or returning. But probably RVm. as a garrison (cf. 1 S. xiii. 23) is right.

that none: i. e. that there be no more armies passing to and fro through Palestine, and threatening Jerusalem. The verse might well have been written at some time between 320 and 300 B. C., when the armies of Alexander's surviving generals, or of his successors, repeatedly traversed Palestine (pp. 231 f.) in one direction or another, in the struggle to secure Palestine and Coele-Syria.

oppressor. The Heb. nāgas means properly 'to press hard,' whether as a taskmaster (Ex. v. 6), or by other violence (Is. iii. 5, liii. 7), or as a foreign 'oppressor' (Is. ix. 4, xiv. 2, 4), or (RVm.) an 'exactor' (2 K. xxiii. 35).

for now have I seen with mine eyes: viz. the violence done to my people, and, it is implied, am prepared to interpose and check it. Cf. Ex. iii. 7; Ps. x. 14.

9-17. The Messianic king enters his capital in triumph, as the Prince of peace (vv. 9-10); and the Israelites still in exile, having vanquished the Greeks, return to dwell in safety in their own land.

9. The advent of the ideal King, or Messiah, is an occasion worthy to be greeted by Zion with acclamation and rejoicing.

daughter: the personified population; cf. Zeph. iii. 14.

just. Or, righteous. The first attribute of a ruler, and hence ass, even upon a colt the foal of an ass. And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the horse from Jeru-predicated emphatically of the Messianic king, Is. xi. 3-5, xvi. 5, Jer. xxiii. 5 (|| xxxiii. 15). The position of the word before 'saved' (i. e. victorious), and the fact that the rule of the ideal king is first characterized in v. 10<sup>b</sup>, lead Hitz., Now., and Marti, however, to think that it has here the meaning of in the right (viz. against his foes); cf. for this sense of the word Dt. xxv. 1.

having salvation. The Heb. word is a passive participle, and means simply saved (Dt. xxxiii. 29; Ps. xxxiii. 16), viz. through Yahweh's having given him 'salvation,' i. e. (see on Hab. iii. 8) deliverance from his foes. The Messiah is described not as bringing victory or salvation, but as the passive recipient of it. 'Saved' is, however, rather a poor word to use in such a connexion; and victorious is the word that would most adequately express what is intended.

lowly. This is עָנִי, not נָנִי, the word used here (see 'POOR' in DB.); to obtain the idea 'lowly' or 'humble' (cf. LXX. πραῦς, 'meek'; so Mt. xxi. 5), we must alter the text and read עָנִי. עָנִי, properly afflicted, poor, is the word used often, as explained on Hab. iii. 14, Zeph. iii. 12, to denote the pious servants of God; and that is probably the sense which it has here: it characterizes the Messiah as belonging 'not to the worldly or godless party dominant in Jerusalem, but to that of the oppressed pious' (We.).

riding upon an ass. Another point in which Israel's ideal king will differ alike from the earlier kings of Israel and from ordinary worldly rulers; he will appear riding, not like a worldly conqueror on his war-horse (for in his day the war-horse is to be no more, v. 10), but upon the ass, the beast of peace (cf. Gen. xlix. 11). See the fulfilment in Mt. xxi. 5, John xii. 15. But, as in other cases, the prophet's ideal as a whole, in the form in which he projected it, has never been fulfilled: for the picture drawn by him is not that of a spiritual ruler, swaying the hearts of men by the influences of a great religion, but that of a conqueror, returning from the defeat of earthly foes, cutting off the implements of war, and securing peace for his subjects by righteous government.

10. All implements of war will be destroyed; the ideal king will maintain a far-reaching rule of peace. For the picture, cf. Hos. ii. 18<sup>b</sup>, Is. ii. 4 (= Mic. iv. 3), ix. 5, Mic. v. 10.

I will cut off. LXX, We., Now., Marti, he will cut off.

from Ephraim. The prophet pictures the northern tribes as restored to their old homes, which are now (v. 1 ff.) free for them to occupy. So in the sequel, v. 13, x. 6, 7, 10. Cf. Is. xl. 12; Jer. iii. 12, 18, xxxi. 4-9, 15-20; Zech. viii. 13, &c.

from sea to sea, &c. Verbally as Ps. lxxii. 8, also of the ideal king. The 'River' is of course the Euphrates, the ideal limit of Israel's territory towards the E. in the promises Gen. xv. 18, Ex. xxiii. 31, Dt. i. 7, xi. 24, Jos. i. 4 (cf. Is. xxvii. 12): the two 'seas' will be the Mediterranean Sea (Dt. xi. 24; Jos. i. 4) and the vaguely known sea supposed to encircle the E. of Asia. The entire picture is of a rule like that of Solomon (1 K. iv. 21, cf. vv. 24<sup>b</sup>, 25, 34), extended so as to embrace in effect the entire known earth.

11-12. The Israelites scattered among the heathen may now hope for restoration; and Zion will receive double compensation for what she has gone through. If the prophecy dates from B. C. 332, the reference may be general (cf. Is. xxvii. 13); if it is later, the reference may be in particular (cf. v. 13) to Jews settled, or enslaved, in Greek cities, who after Alexander's conquests soon became numerous: Josephus, for instance, tells us (Ant. xii. 1) that Ptolemy Lagi (B. C. 322-285) transported many either as slaves or as compulsory settlers to Egypt, others also migrated there voluntarily on account of the advantages which the country offered them (cf. Mahaffy, Empire of the Ptolemies, p. 85 ff.; and Schürer, art. 'DIASPORA' in DB. v. 91, 95, 96, &c.). Seleucus Nicator (B. C. 312-280), also, planted many Jewish colonists in Antioch and elsewhere, giving them rights of citizenship (Jos. Ant. xii. 3. 1).

11. Thou also. The pron. is fem., showing that the daughter of Zion (v. 9) is still addressed. But the 'also' refers really to the 'prisoners': these also—i. e. the Israelites still in captivity—will share in Yahweh's deliverance, as well as those in Judah and Jerusalem.

because of the blood of thy covenant. Because of Yahweh's covenant with Israel, which was concluded solemnly with blood (Ex. xxiv. 5-8). It is argued, however, that had this been the meaning, my covenant would have been said; and so Now., Smith, Marti render because of thy covenant-blood, i. e. the blood which the people shed daily in sacrifice to maintain the covenant.

covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water. <sup>a</sup> Turn you to the strong hold, ye <sup>12</sup> prisoners of hope: even to-day do I declare that I will render double unto thee. For I have bent Judah for me, <sup>13</sup> I have filled the bow with Ephraim; and I will stir up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O <sup>b</sup> Greece, and will make thee as the sword of a mighty man. And the LORD <sup>14</sup> wherein is no water. And in which, consequently, the prisoner was in danger of perishing from thirst.

12. These 'prisoners,' who now at length may cherish 'hope' of deliverance, are accordingly invited to return (RVm.) to the 'strong hold,' fig. of their home, as a place of security,—perhaps with allusion to the rocky fastnesses of Palestine.

even to-day. Rather, to-day (i.e. now) also,—viz. as before, when the return granted by Cyrus was in prospect. 'Thee' is Zion (v. 13).

double. I.e. double compensation: cf. Is. lxi. 7.

13-16. The great victory which the Jews, with Yahweh's help, will gain over the Greeks, inaugurating thereby the Messianic age (v. 9 f.).

13<sup>a</sup>. A poetical way of saying that the warriors of Israel are weapons in Yahweh's hand: Judah is His bow, and Ephraim His arrows. As before (v. 10), the Israelites of the Northern kingdom are pictured as brought back from exile, and taking part in the conflict.

13<sup>b</sup>. and will make thee—i.e. Zion—as the sword of a mighty man: i.e. of a warrior (see on Nah. ii. 3).

Greece, Heb. Yavan. I.e. Iáfoves, Ionians, the name by which the Greeks were always known to the Hebrews (Gen. x. 2, 4; Ez. xxvii. 13; Is. lxvi. 19; Joel iii. 6 Heb.; Dan. viii. 20, 21, xi. 2).

14. In the midst of the fray, Yahweh Himself will appear above the combatants, in order to help the Israelites. The imagery is evidently suggested by a great storm; but whereas elsewhere (e.g. Is. xxx. 30), the lightning, for instance, is Yahweh's arrow, and the thunder is His voice, here His arrows (Hab. iii. 11 al.) are only compared to the lightning.

shall be seen over them, and his arrow shall go forth as the lightning : and the Lord GOD shall blow the trumpet, 15 and shall go with whirlwinds of the south. The LORD of hosts shall defend them ; and they shall devour, and shall tread down the sling stones ; and they shall drink, and make a noise as through wine : and they shall be filled 16 like bowls, like the corners of the altar. And the LORD

in whirlwinds of the south. Such as were especially vehement and destructive (Is. xxi. 1 ; cf. Job xxxvii. 9). For Yahweh travelling in the storm, cf. on Nah. i. 3<sup>b</sup>.

15. they shall devour, &c. If the text is correct, the meaning must be shall devour (their enemies), and trample down contemptuously the sling stones which have been hurled against them, but have missed their mark. But perhaps We., Now., Marti are right in reading, and they shall prevail (וַיִּנְצְחוּ for וַיִּכְלוּ), and tread down the sons of . . . (אֲנָשֵׁי בְנֵי for אֲנָשֵׁי); the word rendering 'sling' being a corruption of the name or description of their foes.

and they shall drink (viz. their blood), and make a noise as (through) wine (i. e. as if intoxicated through wine). But a much better sense is obtained by reading, with MSS. of LXX, וְיִשְׂכְּרוּ for וַיִּשְׂכְּרוּ; we then get, and they shall drink their blood as wine; cf. the next clause.

and they shall be filled (viz. with the blood) like bowls. The 'bowls' (lit. tossing-vessels; EVV. 'basons,' Ex. xxxviii. 3 al.) in which the sacrificial blood was thrown in a volume, or tossed (sārak), against the sides of [not 'upon'] the altar, Lev. i. 5, 11 al. (RV. unfortunately, as AV., 'sprinkle,' which not only conveys an incorrect idea of the action meant, but also confuses it with an entirely different word, correctly rendered sprinkle, Lev. iv. 6, 17, v. 9, viii. 11 al.).

like the corners of the altar. Against which, as just described, the blood would be tossed,—in such a way, viz. that with two tossings the four sides of the altar were drenched with it (Zebāhim v. 4). It is a strange picture : the victorious Jews as full of the blood of their foes as the sacrificial basons when an animal has been just slaughtered for sacrifice ; and as drenched with it as the sides of the altar when the blood has just been tossed against them. But it reflects, no doubt, the animus with which a people that had suffered much regarded its oppressors. Cf. Nu. xxiii. 24 (where, however, though Israel is meant, the figure is that of a wild beast) ; also Is. xxxiv. 7, lxiii. 3.

16. as the flock, &c. Better (Keil), (even) his people as a flock<sup>1</sup>; for (they are) stones (i. e. jewels) of a crown, glittering<sup>2</sup> (RVm.) upon his land; Yahweh will deliver His people, and tend them like a flock, for they are as jewels upon His land, which He prizes highly. The text is, however, suspicious: the comparison to a 'flock,' and afterwards that to the jewels of a crown, both come in abruptly: the subj. 'they' (הם) after 'for' is also much desiderated. 'For (they are) stones' looks much as if it were an error for 'as stones' (כאבני for כי אבני); and We., Now., Marti, would omit 'like the glittering stones of a crown' as a gloss, and read (Marti), 'And Yahweh their God will save them in that day; like a flock will he shepherd them (עמו ירעה) upon his land.' The omission, however, is violent; and perhaps 'as jewels of a crown glittering upon his land' should be retained after 'shepherd them.'

17. The fertility of the land, and the happiness of the people, after their deliverance.

The pronouns must refer to 'his people,' and are therefore properly, for clearness, rendered their in RVm. RV. 'his' is intended to refer to Yahweh; but 'beauty' is never predicated of Him. טוֹב, applied to Israel, may mean either fairness (Hos. x. 11) or (RVm.) prosperity; but its goodness or good things (Gen. xlv. 18; Is. i. 19), and its beauty, referring to the land, with a slight change in the Heb. pron. (We., Now., Marti), would be a great improvement. For fertility of the soil as a blessing of the Messianic age, see on viii. 12.

corn and must (see on Hag. i. 11) are mentioned as two of the most valued gifts of the soil of Canaan (see ibid.). That one is to make 'young men' to flourish, and the other 'maids,' is of course merely a rhetorical distinction: cf. Is. xi. 12 (where outcasts is masc., and dispersed fem.).

- 10 Ask ye of the LORD rain in the time of the latter rain, even of the LORD that maketh lightnings; and he shall give them showers of rain, to every one grass in the field.
- 2 For the teraphim have spoken vanity, and the diviners have seen a lie; and <sup>a</sup> they have told false dreams, they
- <sup>a</sup> Or, the dreamers speak falsely

x. 1-2. A short piece standing by itself, without any obvious connexion either with ch. ix or with x. 3 ff., the gist of which <sup>is</sup>, Ask help of Yahweh, not of the teraphim or diviners!

1. Render: Ask of Yahweh rain in the time of the spring-rain! Yahweh maketh the lightning-flashes, and the winter-rain he giveth to them, to every one herbage in the field.

rain. The occasion of the prophecy may naturally be supposed to have been a failure of rain at a time when it was expected and required; but no doubt 'rain' is also intended as a type of other blessings, which are dependent upon God's favour and peace.

latter rain. Spring-rain would be a clearer rendering. What is meant is the rain which fell in March or April, and was needed to mature the ripening crops (cf. Dt. xi. 14; Jer. v. 24; Joel ii. 23). It is opposed to the 'former' or autumn-rain, which fell in October or November, and was necessary to fit the soil to receive the seeds (ll. cc.; Jer. iii. 3).

Yahweh maketh lightning-flashes (the rare word found otherwise only Job xxviii. 26, xxxviii. 25): the precursors and accompaniments of rain (Ps. cxxxv. 7). The words give the reason why rain should be sought from Him.

the winter-rain. 'Showers of rain' is a weak rendering: geshem means a burst of rain, and is used specially of the heavy rains of winter (Cant. ii. 11; Ezr. x. 13 'it is a time of heavy rain'): cf. the writer's note on Am. iv. 7.

2. For the teraphim and diviners can give no help, but are on the contrary the cause of the calamities under which the people suffer.

the teraphim. Probably house-gods, highly venerated by the superstitious Israelites (Jud. xvii. 5, xviii. 14; Hos. iii. 4), regarded as the givers of family prosperity (cf. Gen. xxxi. 19), and also used in divination (Ez. xxi. 21). They were apparently figures in human form (1 S. xix. 13, 16).

have spoken . . . have seen . . . have told. Better, see . . . tell: an established fact, not an event of recent occurrence, is what is referred to. For 'see,' cf. on Nah. i. 1.

vanity: i. e. what is empty and useless. Cf. Is. xli. 29.

idle dreams. For dreams and diviners in connexion, cf.

comfort in vain : therefore they go their way like sheep, they are afflicted, because there is no shepherd.

Mine anger is kindled against the shepherds, and I will <sup>3</sup> punish the he-goats : for the LORD of hosts hath visited his flock the house of Judah, and shall make them as his Jer. xxvii. 9, xxix. 8. RVm. (which is a paraphrase of ' the dreams speak falsely [idly] ') implies a not very probable correction of the text (הלכות השוא for הלכות שוא).

they comfort in vain. Viz. when they promise rain and fruitful seasons. Cf. Jer. xiv. 22.

they move from place to place (Jer. xxxi. 24 Heb.) like sheep: i. e. lead an unsettled, restless life, and fall into various misfortunes for lack of Yahweh's guidance.

For ' they are afflicted,' they wander about (עצ for עז) would yield an idea more consonant with the context.

x. 3-12. The fall of the godless foreign tyrants. Yahweh will visit His people, free them from their foreign rulers ('shepherds' and 'he-goats'), and appoint them native rulers of their own (vv. 3, 4). Endued with new strength, they will thereupon vanquish their foes ; the Ephraimites in exile will return ; Egypt and Assyria will be humbled ; and the restored nation will glory in its God (vv. 5-12). The imagery in v. 3, as in Jer. xxiii. 1-4, Ez. xxxiv (where, however, the 'shepherds' represent native rulers).

3-5. Yahweh is angry with the 'shepherds,' and 'he-goats,' by both of which foreign rulers seem to be meant (see v. 4) : He will visit His flock, and change the poor leaderless sheep, the Jews, into war-horses, give them strong chiefs of their own and weapons of war (v. 4), and enable them to prevail against their enemies (v. 5).

3. punish: Heb., as often, visit upon. See the next note.

hath visited. The prophetic perfect = will visit. The word is here used in its favourable sense, of visiting for the purpose of delivering, freeing from oppression, &c. (Ex. iii. 16 ; Jer. xxix. 10). It is used similarly in its two opposed applications in Jer. xxiii. 2.

he-goats. Fig. of leaders, rulers, as Is. xiv. 9 ; Ez. xxxiv. 17 (here of the Israelitish magnates, who secured all the best things for themselves, vv. 18, 19):

as his goodly horse. A weak rendering: his stately (or majestic) horse is what the Heb. word used (רוּר) means. Yahweh will transform His helpless sheep into splendid war-horses. A prophecy, remarks We., which was remarkably fulfilled in the Maccabean age.

4 goodly horse in the battle. From him shall come forth the corner stone, from him the nail, from him the battle
5 bow, from him every <sup>a</sup>exactor together. And they shall be as mighty men, treading down their enemies in the mire of the streets in the battle; and they shall fight, because the LORD is with them: and the riders on horses shall be 6 confounded. And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and I will save the house of Joseph, and I will <sup>b</sup>bring

4. Judah will now be no longer under the rule of foreign tyrants, but will have native rulers of its own.

From him. I. e. from Judah; cf. Jer. xxx. 21 'And his noble shall be from himself, and his ruler shall come forth from his midst' (Dt. xvii. 15). 'From himself' would be here clearer.

the corner (stone). Fig. of princes, or leading men, supports of the state. See Jud. xx. 2, and 1 S. xiv. 38 ('chiefs,' RVm. corners), Is. xix. 13. The same figure is found in Arabic, where rukn, properly the 'corner' upon which a building is supported, also means a 'noble.'

the nail. Better, the tent-pin, another figure for those who are the stays or supports of the state.

exactor. Better, governor, ruler (RVm.),—here, unlike ix. 8, without any bad connotation, as Is. iii. 12, lx. 17.

5. How, their martial power now restored, they will triumph over their foes.

as mighty men. I. e. as warriors (ix. 13). But perhaps, interchanging a 1 and a 5, we should read (We., Now., Smith, Marti), 'and they shall tread down (more exactly be treading down) the mighty men as mire in the streets': the comparison, as Mic. vii. 12; Ps. xviii. 42.

the riders on horses. A designation of the foes, suggested perhaps by Ez. xxxviii. 15, cf. xxiii. 6, 12, 23.

6-7. Thus Judah will be 'strengthened,' i. e. autonomous and victorious; and then the 'house of Joseph' also, i. e. the Israelites of the ten tribes still in exile (cf. ix. 10, 13), will be brought back, and again live in the light of Yahweh's favour, and (v. 7) in the consciousness of new strength.

6. strengthen. Better, give might to (cognate with 'mighty,' v. 5), i. e. martial prowess, independence, &c.

bring . . . again. Better, bring . . . back. 'Again,' when AV. was made, was often used in the sense of 'back,' and the them again, for I have mercy upon them; and they shall be as though I had not cast them off: for I am the LORD their God, and I will hear them. And they of Ephraim 7 shall be like a mighty man, and their heart shall rejoice as through wine: yea, their children shall see it, and rejoice; their heart shall be glad in the LORD. I will 8 hiss for them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them: and they shall increase as they have increased. <sup>a</sup> And I will sow them among the peoples; and they shall 9 archaism has been frequently retained in RV. (cf. on Nah. ii. 2). But it is liable now to be misunderstood; and the meaning is more clearly expressed by back. In form, the Hebrew word is anomalous, and looks like a hybrid form, compounded of I will bring them back, and I will cause them to dwell (RVm.). The anomaly can, however, in reality be due only to textual corruption; and the context shows that I will bring them back is right.

I have mercy. Better, I have taken compassion (the proph. perfect). Cf. Jer. xxxi. 20 (the same Heb.), also of Ephraim.

7. The Ephraimites' proud consciousness of their new strength.

shall see it. Viz. Yahweh's deliverance (v. 5<sup>b</sup>, 6<sup>a</sup>).

8-9. The means by which their return will be effected.

8. hiss for them. Poet. for call them together, the figure being borrowed from the practice of bee-owners. Cf. Is. v. 26, vii. 18.

as they have increased. Viz. in the past: they shall again be as numerous as they were before the judgement overtook them. Cf. Ez. xxxvi. 10, 11.

9. I will sow them, &c. The words are understood to mean, I will spread them abroad among the peoples, not for their destruction, but, like seeds scattered broad-cast in the earth, for their multiplication. But the context, which on both sides (vv. 6, 8, 10) speaks of Ephraim's return from exile, does not favour this interpretation; and in Hos. ii. 23, Jer. xxxi. 27, which have been quoted in support of it, the expressions used are different. Probably we should read (We., Now.) 'And though I scattered them (אֶרְחֹקם for אֶזְרֹקם) among the peoples, yet in far countries shall they remember me,' i. e. (Ez. xx. 43, xxxvi. 31) think of me, and turn to me in penitence.

 also out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Assyria; and I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon; and place shall not be found for them.
 11 And he shall pass through the sea of affliction, and shall smite <sup>a</sup>the waves in the sea, and all the depths of the Nile shall dry up: and the pride of Assyria shall

and return. Viz. to their own land.

10. The reference is still to the ten tribes (v. 7); and so Egypt and Assyria, not Babylonia, are spoken of as the places of exile (cf. Hos. ix. 3, 6, xi. 11). As, however, in v. 11 'Assyria' is the name not of a country, but of a power or people, there may be at the same time a reference to the Egypt of the Ptolemies, and to the Syrian empire of the Seleucidae, represented by 'Assyria' (cf. p. 231).

again. Better, back; cf. on v. 6.

Gilead and Lebanon. Mentioned as representing the territory, on the E. and W. of Jordan respectively, possessed formerly by the ten tribes. Cf. Mic. vii. 14; Jer. 1. 19.

place shall not be found for them. So numerous will the restored Israelites be. Cf., for this trait in the ideal future, Is.
 xxvi. 15, xxxiii. 17, xlix. 20, liv. 3, Obad. 19 f.

11. And he—i. e. Yahweh, as Ephraim's leader (Ex. xiv. 19 f., cf. Mic. ii. 13<sup>b</sup>)—shall pass through the sea (of) straitness (the sea, which threatens to leave no passage wide enough for the returning exiles to pass through), and he will smite the sea (of) waves (so that a path is made through them, with allusion to Ex. xiv. 16, 21 f.). The imagery is borrowed from the account of the passage of the Red Sea, and generalized: whatever rivers or seas impede the progress of the returning exiles will be smitten by Yahweh, and dried up (cf. Is. xi. 15), as of old He smote and dried up the waters of the Red Sea: 'Assyria,' and Egypt, alike powerless to arrest the return of the exiles, will thus both be humbled. But the expression, 'the sea, straitness,' is a strange one; and it is quite possible that we should read for it (with We., Now., Marti) 'the sea of Egypt' (ים מצרים for ים צר: so Is. xi. 15).

the pride of Assyria. Cf. Is. x. 8 f., 12. 13 f.

sceptre. Or, rod, the emblem of oppression (Is. ix. 4, xiv. 29).

12. The prophet returns to the thought of v. 6.

I will give them might (v. 6) by Yahweh. Emphatic for 'by myself'; cf. Hos. i. 7. But the change of person is awkward: read prob., with other points, 'their might shall be in Yahweh.'

walk up and down in his name: i. e. behave (Ps. xxxv. 14) as if acting in His authority. But LXX, Pesh. have the more forcible and probable reading (We., Now., Smith, Marti), 'and in his name shall they make their boast' (יהללו for יהללו), Ps. xxxiv. 2, and especially cv. 3 (where the same verb is rendered 'glory').

xi. 1-3. A fire devours the cedars of Lebanon; the oaks of Bashan will soon share the same fate: shepherds bewail their desolated pastures, and lions roar because their lairs by the Jordan are destroyed. What the meaning of this is, is uncertain. It may mean merely that the way will shortly be open for an invader to advance from the north, and penetrate into Judah (so Wright): but the description is usually understood in a symbolical sense, the cedars and oaks, the shepherds and the lions, representing either (Hitz., Ew.) the rulers of Israel, or (We., Now., Marti, Kp.) the rulers of the nations,—in Kirkp.'s words, 'the rulers and potentates of the nations are swept down by the storm of war. The rulers are heard lamenting the loss of their magnificence; the potentates mourning for the destruction of their strongholds.' It is also disputed whether the verses form the close of x. 3-12 (We., Now., Marti), or the introduction to xi. 4-17 (Hitz., Ew., Wright, Kp.), or are an independent prophecy by themselves (Smith). But x. 12 seems a natural close; and the context speaks not of an invasion of Israel, but of Israel's deliverance from tyrannical rulers; so, though it is impossible to feel entire confidence in any view, the verses may perhaps be meant as a symbolical description of the ruin of nations declared in xi. 6 to be approaching (Kp.).

1. Lebanon is bidden poetically open its doors, in order that the enemy may enter in, and fire its cedars.

2. Howl, O fir tree, &c. When the 'cedar' is 'fallen,' the smaller 'fir tree' may 'howl'; for the same fate will now assuredly befall it.

goodly. Better, noble, glorious: of a cedar, as Ez. xvii. 23.

- fallen, because the <sup>a</sup>goodly ones are spoiled: howl, O ye oaks of Bashan, for the <sup>b</sup>strong forest is come down.

- 4 Thus said the LORD my God: Feed the flock of oaks of Bashan. The oaks of Bashan are alluded to elsewhere in the O. T. (e. g. Is. ii. 13): there are still forests of them on the slopes of Jebel Hauran, about 60 miles E. of the Sea of Galilee.

strong. Rather, inaccessible, with reference no doubt to the steep mountain sides, up which alone the cedars of Lebanon could be reached. The Hebrew is lit. cut off; and is the word used regularly of what we, from a different point of view, describe as a 'fortified' city (EVV. 'fenced,' or 'defenced': cf. RVm. here), properly one cut off, and so inaccessible to assailants.

3. Hark! the howling of the shepherds, for their glory,— cognate with the word corrected to 'glorious' in v. 2,—is laid waste: i. e. their broad and noble pasture lands. Cf. Jer. xxv. 36 'Hark! the cry of the shepherds, and the howling of the noble ones of the flock (fig. for the ruling men of Judah); for Yahweh is laying waste their pasture.'

Hark! the roaring of the young lions: for the pride of Jordan is laid waste. The banks of the Jordan, especially in its lower course, are fringed by a thick growth of sub-tropical trees and shrubs, which was anciently the haunt of lions; and this was called the pride of Jordan: see Jer. xii. 5 (where its dangers, as a region infested by wild beasts, are alluded to), xlix. 19 = l. 44 (where Nebuchadnezzar is compared to a 'lion' coming up out of it). Here the young lions are represented as roaring, because their lair has been laid waste by the invader.

xi. 4-17. The people's rejection of the good shepherd. The substitution of a worthless shepherd, and its consequences for them. Israel has been the prey of selfish shepherds (i. e. rulers) who have made traffic of it ruthlessly; and the prophet describes what, under these circumstances, he has done by Divine direction. First he enacted the part of a good shepherd, who rescued his flock from its oppressors, and took measures to secure his people's welfare; then, being rejected by his people, in order to mark the consequences which will follow, he assumes the character of a worthless shepherd, who will make havoc of the people for his own advantage, but who will eventually meet with a just retribution.

The sequel follows in xiii. 7-9. The prophets were in the habit sometimes of making their preaching more effective by embodying it in accompanying symbolical acts (Is. xx; Jer. xiii. 1-14, xix. 1-17; Ez. xii. 1-16); and here by this means 'the history is presented in living figures, and at the same time the Divine judgement pronounced upon the persons represented' (Marti). In the present instance, however, from the nature of the case, the prophet could not, any more than Jeremiah in Jer. xxv. 15 ff., have actually enacted the actions narrated; he can only be describing what was in reality transacted either in imagination or in a vision.

The prophecy is the most enigmatic in the Old Testament. It is obviously an allegory, the imagery, like that of x. 3, being based upon Jer. xxiii. 1-4, Ez. xxxiv, in both of which passages it is taught how Yahweh will overthrow Israel's unworthy shepherds, and appoint in their place one or more true shepherds (Jer. xxiii. 4; Ez. xxxiv. 23 ff., cf. xxxvii. 24). The meaning of the allegory is, however, obscure: it is neither interpreted, nor apparent, as in the case of the allegories in Ez. xvii, xix, xxiii. Very few particulars of the internal history of the Jews from the time of Nehemiah (432 B. C.) to c. 175 B. C., when Antiochus Epiphanes began his reign, have been handed down to us: if our information were fuller, we might perhaps find that, at least as far as v. 14, perhaps as far as v. 16, it described in a symbolical form, with the view of drawing out the lessons which they taught, events which had actually happened. Or it may be that the prophet founds his allegory upon historical facts, but does not reproduce them exactly: upon the basis of such facts as that Israel was a prey of foreign despots, was neglected by its own rulers, and despised all wiser counsellors, he may have drawn an emblematic picture of the evil results which the rejection of Yahweh's counsellors would entail. The 'traffickers of the sheep' might be either the generals of Alexander, who after his death contended for the possession of Coele-Syria and Palestine (p. 231); or their successors on the throne of Egypt or Antioch, the Ptolemies or the Seleucidae, both of whom valued Palestine chiefly as a source of revenue<sup>1</sup>: the 'shepherds' seem to be the native rulers, primarily the high-priests (see xiii. 7), who in post-exilic times wielded the chief power in the state, though others in authority at the time are perhaps included: three of these (v. 8) may have been suddenly overthrown.

Attempts have been made to fix the allusions more definitely. By those who (see p. 230) consider the prophecy to be pre-exilic, the 'three shepherds' are generally supposed to be Zechariah, Shallum (2 K. xv. 8, 13), and some third usurper, not mentioned in the history, of the same time; a common and ancient interpretation is of the three offices of king (or prince), priest, and prophet, supposed to have been brought to an end either at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem in 586, or by the death of Christ: Keil thinks of the rulers of the three world-monarchies, the Persians, the Greeks, and the Romans; Stade suggests the Assyrians, Babylonians, and Persians; Dr. Wright (pp. 313, 316 f.) explains the passage as a prediction of the fall of the three Syrian kings, the foes of the Jews, Antiochus Epiphanes (B.C. 175-164), Antiochus Eupator (164-162), and Demetrius I (162-150), who all met their death within a period of thirty years (symbolized by the 'one month' = thirty days): Wellhausen (thinking the passage to be written between B.C. 200 and 166) considers the allusion to be to some of the high-priests who at that time, just before the Maccabean rising, followed one another in rapid succession: Marti thinks definitely of Jason, brother of the legitimate high-priest Onias III, who purchased the high-priesthood from Antiochus Epiphanes, expelled Onias III, and became afterwards the leader of the Hellenizing party in Jerusalem (B.C. 174-171); Menelaus, who, outbidding Jason, secured the high-priesthood for himself (B.C. 171-164); and Lysimachus, brother and deputy of Menelaus, who excited the hatred of the populace and was killed in a riot (2 Macc. iv-v, xiii. 3-8),—the 'month' being taken generally to signify a short time. Marti suggests further that the worthless shepherd of xi. 15-17 may be Alcimus, the treacherous and unsatisfactory high-priest (B.C. 164-160), appointed by Demetrius I (1 Macc. vii. 5-25, ix. 1, 54-56). Kirkpatrick, on the other hand, thinks that no precise meaning need be attached to the expression: the three shepherds are 'a part of the furniture of the allegory, and their removal by the prophet within a month is intended to signify God's intention to deal promptly and effectually with the oppressors of His people, whoever they may be.' The expression does, however, seem to point to three definite persons, though our knowledge of the history does not enable us to say who they are. We are equally unable to explain with certainty other historical allusions in the prophecy. In xi. 15-17, xiii. 7, however, the representation may be purely ideal: and it is at least not necessary to suppose any definite person to be referred to.

Whatever, however, its historical occasion may have been, the general teaching of the prophecy remains sufficiently distinct. It teaches the consequences which may follow from the rejection of God's means of help. 'It is a solemn warning of the way in which Divine grace may be frustrated by human obstinacy. The truth which it conveys had been abundantly illustrated in the past history of Israel. It was to receive a more terrible illustration in the subsequent history of the nation' (Kirkp.).

4. The prophet is to enact the part of the ruler after God's own heart.

Thus said. Viz. at some time in the past.

Shepherd the flock of slaughter: i. e. the flock exposed to slaughter, as explained in v. 5. What is meant appears more clearly from v. 15 (where 'yet again' points back to the present verse): the prophet is to act the shepherd, to assume the garb and accoutrements, the staff, club, scrip, &c. of a shepherd.

5. The sheep in this flock are done to death by buyers and sellers; and receive no pity even from their own shepherds. Who the 'buyers' and 'sellers' are is uncertain: most probably, perhaps, some of the Ptolemies and Seleucidae, between whom, after B. C. 323 (pp. 231 f., 253) Israel was often exchanged, not indeed by actual barter, but by the issues of war, undertaken usually, on each side, with the hope of some gain. Or the 'sellers,' as they use the name Yahweh, may be unpatriotic native leaders, who played into the hands of the foreign 'buyers.' The shepherds are seemingly the native rulers, probably the high-priests, with those who assisted them in the management of the state.

hold themselves not guilty: better, are not held guilty (Jer. ii. 3 RV.), i. e. are not punished for it: the entire clause is thus equivalent to, 'slay them with impunity.'

Blessed, &c. An exclamation, implying the satisfaction of the sellers at the good price which they have obtained.

their own shepherds, &c. RVm. is possible grammatically, but not favoured by the context (cf. v. 8).

6. The verse seems to be parenthetical (v. 7 continuing v. 5); and to give a second reason for the command of v. 4: this guidance is needed for Israel, because a period of anarchy is coming upon the earth.

habitants of the land, saith the LORD: but, lo, I will deliver the men every one into his neighbour's hand, and into the hand of his king: and they shall smite the land, and out of their hand I will not deliver them.

the land (twice). Rather, the earth: as the object of the command in v. 4 is to rescue the flock (Israel) from its cruel rulers, the land of Israel can hardly be referred to. For 'his neighbour' (רֵעֵהוּ) the parallelism with 'his king' strongly suggests that we should read 'his shepherd' (רֹעֵהוּ): the meaning will then be that Yahweh will deliver the nations to the ambition and caprice of their rulers. As Stade remarks, the expression would well suit the period c. 320-300 B. C., when Alexander's generals were contending for the possession of the countries conquered by him. will deliver. Heb. am delivering, of the imminent future.

smite. Rather, beat to pieces; a strong word, used of beating to pieces an image, Dt. ix. 21; of beating down an enemy, Nu. xiv. 45 = Dt. i. 44; cf. 2 Chr. xv. 6 (read beaten for broken).

7. verily, &c. R<sup>V</sup>m. is better than R<sup>V</sup>., for the context shows that the reference is to the whole flock, and not merely to a part of it: but לֵכֶן nowhere else means 'verily'; and most probably, throwing two words into one, we should read, for the traffickers of the flock; the prophet, though really he took the sheep away from their merciless owners, says ironically that he shepherded them for them.

And I took unto me two staves. Symbolizing the maxims of government, which he would adopt in his rule. The two 'staves' are such as a shepherd still uses in the East, a short 'rod' (or rather, 'club') to ward off wild beasts, &c., and a longer 'staff' to lean upon in walking. Cf. Ps. xxiii. 4; and DB., s. v. 'Rod.'

Beauty. An extremely bad rendering: no'am means pleasantness, sweetness, or (R<sup>V</sup>m.) graciousness: see Prov. iii. 17, xv. 26, xvi. 24; and of Yahweh, Ps. xxvii. 4 (see R<sup>V</sup>m.), xc. 17. Cognate words in Arabic mean 'favour.' The 'graciousness' was shown (see v. 10) in the means taken to secure Israel from molestation by other nations.

Bands, lit. Binders. The other principle which he adopted was, in a word, union.

flock. And I cut off the three shepherds in one month; 8 for my soul was weary of them, and their soul also loathed me. Then said I, I will not feed you: that that dieth, 9 let it die; and <sup>a</sup>that that is to be cut off, let it be cut off; and let them which are left eat every one the flesh of another. And I took my staff Beauty, and cut it asunder, 10 that I might break my covenant which I had made with all the peoples. And it was broken in that day: and 11 one month. Perhaps not to be understood literally, but meaning a comparatively short time.

and—not 'for,' which is an illegitimate paraphrase—I was impatient with them; lit. my soul was short with them,—a Heb. metaphor for to be impatient: cf. Nu. xxi. 4 (RVm.), and with 'spirit' for 'soul,' Mic. ii. 7 (RVm.), Job xxi. 4 Heb.

with them. I. e. with the people, as is clear both from the preceding 'and,' and from v. 9. This and the next clause describe the failure of the good 'shepherd,' personated by the prophet, in his mission, and the mutual antipathy which sprang up between him and the people, even after he had removed their evil rulers.

9. The 'shepherd' accordingly leaves the people to their fate.

and let them which are left, &c. I. e. let them destroy one another by internecine conflict.

10. The people thus rejecting his rule, the prophet breaks his staff, 'Graciousness,' to symbolize that Yahweh's favour towards them was at an end, and that the 'covenant' which he had (metaphorically) made with the nations that they should not molest Israel was now annulled. Though the expression is general ('all the peoples'), the peoples whom the prophet has specially in view are no doubt Israel's neighbours, the Philistines, Idumaeans, Samaritans, Ammonites, &c., who in the post-exilic period often caused Judah serious trouble. For the fig. application of the idea of a 'covenant,' cf. Hos. ii. 18, Ez. xxxiv. 25, Job v. 23.

11. By the fact that, as soon as the staff was broken, the 'covenant' of peace with the nations ceased likewise, the dealers of the sheep, who had been watching closely and suspiciously the pieces. It is better to supply 'shekels.' A shekel of silver was worth probably about 2s. 9d. (DB. iii. 420), so that thirty shekels would equal about £4 2s. 6d.

12-13. The prophet now asks for his wages; and receives from the people the paltry and insulting sum of thirty shekels of silver, the amount fixed in the 'Book of the Covenant' as the compensation for an injured slave (Ex. xxi. 32). As if to show that it was Yahweh Himself (whose representative the prophet is) whom they paid with so wretched a sum, he casts it, by divine command, into the Temple treasury.

13. Cast it into the treasury. So we must clearly read, with the Pesh. and RVm. (הוֹצֵר for הוֹצֵר); notice especially 'in(to) Yahweh's house' at the end of the verse. The 'potter,' by those who adhere to this reading, is supposed to be mentioned as one of the lowest of the labouring classes, the maker of the commonest and cheapest of vessels, so that casting to the potter would be equivalent to throwing away; but this explanation is very far-fetched.

the goodly price. Better (cf. on v. 2), the noble price. Of course the expression is meant sarcastically.

that I was prised at. We., Now., Marti would read, that thou wast prised at (יִקְרָה for יִקְרָה); but as the prophet represents Yahweh the sense remains substantially the same.

I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them <sup>a</sup> unto the potter, in the house of the LORD. Then I cut asunder <sup>14</sup> mine other staff, even Bands, that I might break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel.

And the LORD said unto me, Take unto thee yet again <sup>15</sup>

of them. A weak and also incorrect rendering. The Heb. prep. is lit. from upon (see Lex. p. 759<sup>b</sup>), and it is used here pregnantly, 'that I was prised at (and dismissed) from them.'

and cast them, &c. Render, in the order of the Heb., and as before with the Syriac, and cast them into Yahweh's house, into the treasury. For 'cast,' cf. 2 Chr. xxiv. 10.

Verse 13 is quoted (with variations from both the Heb. and the LXX) in Mt. xxvii. 9 f. (cf. also v. 12<sup>b</sup> with Mt. xxvi. 15<sup>b</sup>); and applied to the purchase of the potter's field with the money returned by Judas. Clearly, however, the context contains no reference to the future Messiah: so that cannot be the original intention of the passage. The Evangelist follows the exegetical methods current among the Jews of his time (cf. Mt. ii. 15, 18; and on ch. xiii. 7). See further, p. 282.

14. The prophet now breaks his second staff, 'Union,' to signify that the brotherhood between Judah and Israel was broken. By breaking both his staffs he shows that he will have nothing more to do with the ungrateful people: he leaves them to their fate. And what have they to expect, when friendly relations with their neighbours are at an end (v. 10), and there is no longer any unity among themselves?

and Israel. The mention of Israel is remarkable, as the reference is not, as ix. 10, 13, x. 6, 7, to an ideal future, but, as it seems, to the prophet's own time. If the text is correct, it seems that the growth of party-factions in the present must be represented (cf. Keil) as a revival of the ancient rivalries between the N. and S. kingdoms. Wellh. conjectured that 'Israel' was an error for 'Jerusalem,' comparing xii. 2 ff. and xiv. 14, which testify to the existence of antagonisms between the capital and the province of Judah in post-exilic times; and, as Nowack has pointed out, 'Jerusalem' is actually read by two MSS. of the LXX (according to Field, belonging to Lucian's recension). It is quite possible that this is the correct reading.

15-17. The prophet is now directed to personate the 'foolish shepherd,' who, as the people have rejected the good shepherd, will be raised up over them, and who will neglect the flock, or only use it for his own purposes, though in the end a just retribution will overtake him. To judge from xiii. 7, the 'foolish shepherd' is pictured as a high-priest.

15. the instruments. I. e. garb and accoutrements, rod, club, scrip, &c., which in the present case must be pictured as worn out and useless. The word (נִלִּי) is a general one for articles of furniture or dress, armour, utensils, implements, &c.

16. visit. I. e. look after (Jer. xxiii. 2, also of sheep), which, if a thing is destroyed or lost, is equivalent to miss (RVm.): cf. 1. S. xxv. 7, 21; Jer. iii. 16 RVm. For the picture of the bad shepherd, cf. Ez. xxxiv. 4. On RVm. lost, see on v. 9.

those that be scattered. Something of this sort is no doubt intended (LXX, τὸ ἐσκοπισμένον, Jer. dispersum), though it cannot be extracted from the existing text. Perhaps we ought to read הַנִּזְחָלָה that which is driven away (Now.) for הַנִּזְחָל, as in Mic. iv. 6, Zeph. iii. 19, Ez. xxxiv. 4, 16; or הַנִּזְחָלָה that which is lacking (which would more nearly resemble הַנִּזְחָל). RVm. (= AV.) is quite out of the question: the word might mean the young man (or men), but it is never used of the young of animals.

feed. Better, sustain, nourish (1 K. xvii. 4, 9). Not the word rendered feed (properly 'shepherd') in vv. 4, 7, 9.

eat the flesh, &c.: instead of caring for the sheep, preying upon them for his own benefit; cf. Ez. xxxiv. 2, 3.

tear their hoofs in pieces. Either (Ew., Hi.) by driving the sheep cruelly over stony places; or (Keil) devouring their very hoofs in his voracity.

17. The sentence on the foolish shepherd.

Woe to. Better, Ah! (Nah. iii. 1).

the worthless shepherd: lit. the shepherd of nothingness; cf. the same Heb. in Job xiii. 4 'physicians of no value.'

that leaveth the flock. Cf. John x. 12.

xii. 1—xiii. 6, xiv. The deliverance and glorious future of Jerusalem. The prophecy, like ix–xi, xiii. 7–9, will belong to the Greek period, but its exact date in it is uncertain.

(1) xii. 1—xiii. 6. The deliverance of Jerusalem from the attack of the heathen, its penitence for a great national crime, and its purification from all sin and uncleanness.

xii. 1–9. The prophet sees an assembly of nations, including Judah, advancing against Jerusalem (vv. 1–3); but their forces are smitten with a sudden panic (v. 4), and the chieftains of Judah, perceiving that Yahweh fights for Jerusalem, turn their arms against the other nations (v. 5 f.): the men of Judah are first victorious, and then they assist in saving the capital (vv. 7–9). The earlier prophets spoke of the actual nations, the Assyrians or Babylonians, who were hostile to Israel; the thought of an imagined attack of hostile nations in the future is an eschatological trait, suggested probably by Ez. xxxviii–xxxix (cf. pp. 233, 235).

1. The oracle of Yahweh's word, &c. See on ix. 1.

Thus saith Yahweh. One of the very few cases in which the prophetic formula, נאם יהוה (properly '(t)is Yahweh's whisper'), instead of being thrown in parenthetically, precedes the words spoken (Is. lvi. 8; Ps. cx. 1).

which stretcheth forth, &c. The epithets point to Yahweh as all-powerful, and therefore as able to bring about the events here foretold. Cf. Is. xlii. 5; xliv. 24.

2. I am making: i. e. am about to make; see on Nah. ii. 2.

a cup of reeling. Better, a bowl (Ex. xii. 22 'bason') of reeling: Jerusalem is figured as a vast bowl, large enough for many to drink from at once: the nations gather round it eager to taste its contents; but the draught intoxicates all who drink it and causes them to reel, or stagger back, confused and discomfited. Jerusalem, in other words, is represented as alluring the nations to their ruin. Cf. on Nah. iii. 11, Hab. ii. 15, 16, where the same

and upon (or against) Judah, &c. A very difficult and uncertain clause. In RV. 'it' is best taken to mean (Keil) what has just been described (v. 2<sup>a</sup>): this will fall upon Judah as well as upon Jerusalem. But the thought is not expressed at all naturally. RVM. has 'and upon Judah also shall it fall (to be),' &c., i. e. it will be incumbent upon Judah, Judah also will be obliged to take part in the siege against Jerusalem. This would agree with the sequel; but the absence of 'to be' in the Heb. is an objection to it. The same sense would be better obtained by the omission (We., Now., Marti) of על ('upon'), 'And Judah also will be in the siege against Jerusalem,' but, as Marti points out, יהיה במצור means elsewhere not 'to take part in a siege,' but 'to be besieged' (Ez. iv. 3). Marti himself cuts the knot by reading (partly with LXX), 'and there shall be a siege against Jerusalem.'

3. a burdensome stone. A stone so heavy that those who attempt to lift it only wound and lacerate themselves in the process. The expression may be borrowed from the custom which Jerome says prevailed in Palestine in his time, of young men testing their strength against one another by the height they were able to lift (not to 'throw') stones of great weight.

wounded. Better, lacerated. The word occurs besides only in Lev. xxi. 5, where it is used of making incisions in oneself, or tattooing oneself, in mourning.

4-6. Yahweh strikes with a panic all the besiegers, except Judah, who, perceiving thus that God is on the side of Jerusalem, turns to her help, and proceeds to attack the other assailants.

4. will smite . . . with astonishment . . . with madness . . . with blindness. A reminiscence of Dt. xxviii. 28.

of Judah, and will smite every horse of the peoples with blindness. And the chieftains of Judah shall say in their 5 heart, The inhabitants of Jerusalem are my strength in the LORD of hosts their God. In that day will I make 6 the chieftains of Judah like a pan of fire among wood, and like a torch of fire among sheaves; and they shall devour all the peoples round about, on the right hand and on the left: and Jerusalem shall yet again dwell in her own place, even in Jerusalem. The LORD also shall save 7

1 K. viii. 29; Jer. xl. 4 (Heb. 'I will set my eye upon ~~them~~').

5. Judah will thus be brought to recognize that Jerusalem, instead of being its foe, is in reality its natural ally, and a source of strength to it, through being under the protection of its God.

the chieftains. More exactly (see on ix. 7), the clan-chiefs. We., Now., Marti would read the clans (~~the~~ for ~~the~~, as in ix. 7): the sense, however, remains substantially the same; for the 'clan-chiefs' are naturally regarded as representing the corresponding 'clans.'

6. Judah now destroys the other assailants: they are as powerless against her as a heap of faggots, or a shock of corn, against the flames.

the chieftains. As before, the clan-chiefs. Or, making again the same change in the punctuation, the clans:

shall yet again dwell. Or, sit, i. e. be again a flourishing and prosperous city: see on ii. 4; and cf. xiv. 10.

even in Jerusalem. There is no 'even' in the Heb.; and 'in Jerusalem' (which is unsuitable after 'Jerusalem shall sit') is doubtless to be omitted, with nineteen MSS. of LXX.

7. 'The glory of the victory is first Judah's, so that the house of David may not have too much fame, or boast over the country districts. The writer doubtless alludes to some temporary schism between the capital and the country caused by the arrogance of the former. But we have no means of knowing when this took place. It must often have been imminent in the days both before and especially after the Exile, when Jerusalem had absorbed all the religious privilege and influence of the nation' (G. A. Smith, pp. 478 f.)<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> We., Now. regard the verse as an interpolation, dating from the Maccabæan age. In vv. 4, 6 Judah is not represented as being in the tents of Judah first, that the glory of the house of David and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem be 8 not magnified above Judah. In that day shall the LORD defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and he <sup>a</sup>that is feeble among them at that day shall be as David; and the house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the LORD

 9 before them. And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against 10 Jerusalem. And I will pour upon the house of David,

the house of David. I. e. members of David's family, who no doubt took a prominent and influential place in Jerusalem in post-exilic times. Cf. vv. 8 (where see the note), 10, 12, xiii. 1; Ezr. viii. 2; 1 Chr. iii. 17-24.

8. The inhabitants of Jerusalem will be supernaturally strengthened to overcome the foe.

he that is feeble. Lit. as marg., he that stumbleth, he who from weakness cannot stand firm upon his feet: cf. 1 S. ii. 4, Ps. cv. 37, 2 Chr. xxviii. 15, Is. xxxv. 3,—in all which passages the Heb. verb is the same as here.

as David. Named as the type of a brave and dauntless warrior (1 S. xvii. 34 ff.; 2 S. xvii. 8).

the house of David. The existing representatives of the ancient royal house,—perhaps (We., Now.) used here in an enlarged sense to denote the government generally (cf. Ps. cxxii. 5). These will be strengthened, so as to be comparable even to God, or a divine being,—and Yahweh's angel, the powerful protector (Ps. xxxiv. 7) and leader of His people (with 'before them,' cf. Gen. xxiv. 7, Ex. xiv. 19, xxiii. 20, 23, xxxii. 34). With the comparison to Yahweh's angel in general, cf. 1 S. xxix. 9, 2 S. xiv. 17, 20, xix. 27.

10-14. After this triumph, the whole nation, every family by itself, from the noblest downwards, holds a great lamentation over a martyr 'whom they have pierced.'

10. The house of David and inhabitants of Jerusalem is any need of help or deliverance; on the contrary, it is Judah which delivers Jerusalem. The representation, however, suits the situation in the Maccabæan period, when the deliverance of Jerusalem and of the cities of Judæa did not come from Jerusalem, but was effected by means of the Maccabees from Modin (1 Macc. ii).

a comprehensive expression, intended to include the entire people, under the two categories of the rulers and the ruled. Upon these Yahweh will then pour a spirit of grace and supplication (or grace-seeking, the Heb. word being cognate with that for 'grace'), i.e. a spirit eager to obtain 'grace' or favour, and impelling to supplicate for it,—the 'favour' meant here being forgiveness for the great sin which they have committed. 'Spirit,' in Heb., in passages such as the present, signifies an impulse, the genitive following denoting its character, as Nu. v. 14 a spirit of jealousy, Dt. xxxiv. 9 of wisdom, Is. xix. 14 of perverseness, xxviii. 6 of judgement, xxix. 10 of deep sleep, Hos. iv. 12 of whoredom. The 'spirit' may be regarded as sent from Yahweh, and therefore as in a sense Divine; but it is not the Divine spirit, even where Yahweh is expressly named as its author, as Is. xix. 14, xxix. 10 (where it is used in a bad sense) sufficiently show. For 'pour out,' cf. Ez. xxxix. 29 (of Yahweh's spirit to be poured out upon Israel in the future after its deliverance from the ideal assault of nations under Gog), Joel ii. 28-29.

and they shall look upon me, whom they have pierced. The words describe the effect of the 'spirit,' eager to obtain Yahweh's favour and forgiveness: they will look upon him whom they had pierced, with grief and penitence. The passage is, however, one of those which our ignorance of the circumstances of the time makes it impossible to interpret as a whole satisfactorily or completely. As the text stands, the speaker must, of course, be Yahweh, and it is, no doubt, perfectly true that 'the Jews had pierced Him metaphorically by their rebellion and ingratitude throughout their history. They pierced Him, literally and as the crowning act of their contumacy, in the Person of His Son upon the Cross, John xix. 37' (T. T. Perowne). But these considerations do not explain the passage here. However true in themselves, and however remarkable an anticipation of the literal piercing of Christ the words may be, neither the Israelites' rejection of Yahweh in the past, nor their rejection of Christ in the future, can be referred to here; not only does the context point plainly to some historical event in the prophet's own time, for which the people would eventually feel the sorrow here described (vv. 10<sup>b</sup>-14), but the Jews, as a nation (vv. 12-14), certainly never felt any grief or remorse for the death of Christ. Accepting the text as it stands, the meaning can only be that, in the murder or martyrdom referred to, Yahweh had been thrust through in the person of His representative. But as Kirkpatrick remarks (p. 468), 'The

they have pierced: and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his firstborn. In that day shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem, as the difficulty of the text is very great. Could the prophet have spoken of thrusting Yahweh through? The construction, too, excites suspicion.<sup>1</sup> The reading of the marg. (some fifty MSS., Ew., Smith) implies only  $\text{וְלֵאמֹר}$  for  $\text{וְלֵאמֹר}$ , and seems required by the following clause. Even so, however, the Heb. remains peculiar<sup>1</sup>; and We., Now., Marti conjecture that something has either fallen out, or been intentionally omitted, from the text ('and they shall look unto . . . whom they have pierced'). But whoever the martyr or godly counsellor alluded to may have been, his rejection by the Jews is undoubtedly a striking type of their rejection of Christ afterwards<sup>2</sup>.

and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth, &c. A very inadequate rendering: we may 'mourn' in silent grief, but  $\text{וַיַּעַב}$  is to wail, in loud and passionate grief. Render, and they shall wail for him, as one walleth for an only son—mentioned like that for the firstborn in the parallel clause as an instance of particularly poignant and bitter grief. Cf. Am. viii. 10 (where 'mourning' is correct), Jer. vi. 26 (where, for consistency, lamentation should be wailing); also, for 'wail,' on Zech. vii. 5.

great, like the wailing of [or for] Hadadrimmon in the plain of Megiddon. It is obvious that some occasion of great public lamentation is referred to; but what it is, is uncertain. The name 'Hadadrimmon' does not occur elsewhere; but so far as the form goes it might be that of either (1) a place, or (2) a deity. 'Hadad' (also in the proper names Hadad, Ben-hadad, Hadadezer), and 'Rimmon,' or properly Rammān (also 2 K. v. 18; in Tab-rimmon, 1 K. xv. 18, and in some place-names, cf. ch. xiv. 10), were respectively the Syrian and Assyrian names of the same deity, the god of rain, storm, and thunder (see DB. 'RIMMON'; more fully Zimmern in KAT.<sup>3</sup> 442 ff.): hence, (1) 'Rimmon' being originally the name of a place where this deity was worshipped, 'Hadad of Rimmon' (like 'Baal of Peor') might have come to be the fuller name of the same place; or (2) 'Hadad-Rimmon' may have been in use as a compound name of the deity himself. (1) From Targ. and Pesh. onwards Hadadrimmon has commonly been taken as the name of the place,—according to Jerome, a city near Jezreel in the plain of Megiddo, called in his day Maximianopolis,—at which Josiah was bewailed after his death at Megiddo (2 K. xxiii. 29 f.): the Chronicler also tells us (2 Chr. xxxv. 25) that dirges (נִזְמוֹת) in memory of Josiah were recited even to his own time (c. 300–250 B.C.). Upon this view, Hadadrimmon has been identified with Rummaneh, a place about four miles SSE. of Megiddo. It is, however, very doubtful whether this explanation is correct: Josiah, we are told, after his death was carried at once by his servants to Jerusalem, which was the natural place for the public lamentation in his honour to be held: the situation of Rummaneh does not suit other ancient notices of Maximianopolis (see Buhl, Geogr. p. 209); and Jerome's statement is open to the suspicion of being based upon nothing more than the occurrence of the same expression, 'in the plain of Megiddo,' in 2 Chr. xxxv. 22. (2) 'Hadadrimmon' has been taken by various recent scholars as the name of a deity. There was a Syrian and Phoenician deity called Tammuz, known to the Greeks as Adonis ('lord'), in the Greek legend a beautiful youth, killed by a boar, and bitterly bewailed by his spouse Aphrodite, in whose rites lamentations and weeping played a prominent part (see Ez. viii. 14). Now, as both Hadad and Tammuz were worshipped in the Phoenician city of Byblus, it has been conjectured that the two deities may have been amalgamated or confused, so that there may have been a 'wailing for Hadadrimmon,' analogous to that for Tammuz. No positive confirmation of this conjecture has, however, as yet been discovered. See further the full discussion by Baudissin, in PRE.<sup>3</sup> vii. (1899), s. v.

12-14. The wailing will be universal, but not confused or disorderly; every family, the sexes apart, will form itself into a separate group. As examples, the prophet singles out the kingly and priestly families; and at the same time takes a subordinate branch in each, for the purpose of showing how the wailing is to extend to every subdivision of the entire nation.

12. shall mourn. Render: shall wail.

the family of the house of David. The family comprising the representatives of the line of the kings.

the family of the house of Nathan. Probably the son of David, mentioned in 2 S. v. 14; 1 Chr. iii. 5, xiv. 4; Luke iii. 31.

13. the family of the house of Levi. I. e. the main priestly family descended from Levi.

the family of Shimei. Probably a subordinate line, which traced its descent to the grandson of Levi mentioned in Nu. iii. 21.

xlii. 1-6. Henceforth a fountain for purification from sin is permanently opened in Jerusalem; and all idolatry and degraded prophecy are exterminated from the land. For the thought of the removal, or forgiveness, of sin in the ideal future see on ch. iii. 9. The promise of v. 1 follows suitably upon the penitence described in xii. 10-14.

1. there shall be . . . opened. Not the simple future, but the substantive verb and the participle (LXX ἔσται . . . διανοιγόμενος), implying that the fountain is to be continuously open.

and for impurity. The Heb. niddāh is a technical term of the Levitical law, used especially of the ceremonial uncleanness occasioned by menstruation, Lev. xii. 2, xv. 19, Ez. xviii. 6, xxii. 10, xxxvi. 17 [RV. in Ez. wrongly 'separation'], or by con-

The prophet, on the ground, no doubt, of the ceremonial lustrations with the 'water of [i. e. for removing] impurity,' as prescribed in Nu. xix, pictures a fountain in Jerusalem, providing a continuous supply of water for the removal of all impurity from the people. the prophets. In general: not merely 'false' prophets. Prophecy, when the author wrote, must have become degraded, and prophets must have been either (Wellh.) public demagogues, or (G. A. Smith) mere professional and mercenary oracle-mongers. The author himself would be distinguished from such, by being a writing prophet, perhaps also by writing anonymously.

the unclean spirit. Rather, the spirit of uncleanness, i. e. the spirit, or impulse (cf. on xii. 10), leading men to it.

3. If any one comes forward as a prophet, his own parents will be prepared not merely to disown him, but even to put him to death, so convinced will they be that he can be only an impostor. Cf. Dt. xiii. 6-10 (where, if any one attempts to seduce his countrymen into idolatry, his nearest relations are to be the first to come forward and stone him to death), xviii. 20 (death to be the punishment of the false prophet).

prophet (1 K. xix. 13, 19, 2 K. ii. 8) ; this passage and 2 K. i. 8 (RVm.) show further that it was of hair,—whether a sheep's skin (LXX, of Elijah's mantle, μηλωτή), or woven of camel's hair, like that worn by John the Baptist (Mt. iii. 4). Here the 'hairy mantle' is in particular a mark of the prophet of the degraded professional type referred to above, which had fallen into disrepute.

5. One who had once been a prophet will disclaim his profession, and own only to having been a tiller of the soil.

for I have been made a bondman. Lit. for man has made (others) buy me = caused me to be bought,—a singular expression, which occurs nowhere else. Wellh.'s clever emendation is extremely probable : for the land has been my possession (עַדְמָהּ הָיָה לִי אֶרֶץ) from my youth.

6. But the wounds on his person seem to contradict his claim to be a mere tiller of the soil ; so he has to own that they are the blows which he received from his friends, when they went about to kill him (cf. v. 3), on account of his coming forward as a prophet.

between thine hands (RVm.). A peculiar expression, meaning, as is generally supposed, on thy breast (cf. 'between his arms,' i. e. on his back, 2 K. ix. 24, 'between your eyes,' i. e. on your foreheads, Dt. xiv. 1), or possibly (We.), which are before thee, which thou canst not deny.

friends. The Heb. is the ptc. of the intensive conjug. (Piel), which elsewhere means lovers (RVm.), or paramours, a term used by Hosea of the Baals (Hos. ii. 5, 7, 10, 12, 13), and by other prophets of foreign allies (Jer. xxii. 20, 22, xxx. 14 al.), whose favour and help Israel or Judah courted. Hence the answer has been supposed to be a confession by the prophet of former idolatries, the 'wounds' being those which were self-inflicted in the service of the false gods alluded to (cf. 1 K. xviii. 28). The passive, was smitten, is however against this interpretation ; and a reference to idolatry is foreign to the context : it is the prophet in general, not the prophet of false gods, who is represented in the context as discredited. It seems, therefore, that the word must here denote the prophet's 'friends,' who sought to kill him, for the reason stated above.

the man that is my fellow, saith the LORD of hosts : smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered ; and I will turn mine hand upon the little ones. And it shall come 8

7-9. The close of the prophecy xi. 4-17. It must be obvious that the passage is out of connexion both with xiii. 1-6 and with ch. xiv, whereas it is connected with xi. 4-17 not only by the figure of the shepherd and the flock, but also by the fact that xi. 15-17 supplies the reason why the 'shepherd' of v. 7 is to be smitten, which conversely appears nowhere either in ch. xii or in xiii. 1-6. Since Ewald, who first pointed out that xiii. 7-9 supplied the natural close to xi. 4-17, this view of it has been generally accepted by critical commentators.

The passage describes the ultimate fate of the 'foolish shepherd' of xi. 15-17, and of his flock : the 'shepherd' will be smitten, and the 'sheep,' who had rejected (xi. 12-14) the ruler after Yahweh's own heart, will be scattered : but a portion will be left in the land ; and these, after being purified by severe trials, will form the nucleus of the future faithful people of God.

7. The sword is personified, as Jer. xlvii. 6, 7.

my shepherd. The 'foolish shepherd' of xi. 15-17, called 'Yahweh's shepherd,' in so far as, however unworthy, he stands officially at the head of Yahweh's people.

the man that is my fellow. The high-priest. The titles of honour applied to the 'foolish shepherd' throw into the greater relief his abuse of the office that he holds, and his unfitness for it (xi. 16). The word rendered 'fellow' is an uncommon one, and occurs besides only Lev. vi. 2 (Heb. v. 21) twice, xviii. 20, xix. 11, 15, 17, xxiv. 19, xxv. 14 twice, 15, 17 (EVV. 'neighbour,' 'another').

smite. The verb in the Heb. is masc., so the unnamed foe, not the sword, must be addressed. LXX (B N) read the plural, πατάτε, though most MSS. have the sing. πάταξον : three have πάταξω 'I will smite' (כח for כך), a reading followed also in the quotation, Mt. xxvi. 31. This agrees with the following 'I will turn' and is probably right : the sword is directed by Yahweh Himself.

The words are quoted in Mt. xxvi. 31 with reference to the dispersion of the disciples after the betrayal of Christ ; but, as the context shows (see esp. v. 8 f.), that cannot be their original intention : rather, we must suppose, they are quoted, without regard to their original import, as a description in Old Testament phraseology of a New Testament fact : see similar cases in Mt. ii. 15, 18, xiii. 14 f., 35, xv. 8, Rom. viii. 36, ix. 25 f., x. 18, and elsewhere.

turn mine hand upon. Or, against, viz. in judgement : see the same expression in Am. i. 8, Is. i. 25, Ps. lxxxi. 14.

- to pass, that in all the land, saith the LORD, two parts therein shall be cut off and die; but the third shall be 9 left therein. And I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried: they shall call on my name, and I will hear them: I will say, It is my people; and they shall say, The LORD is my God.
- 14 [A<sup>4</sup>] Behold, a day of the LORD cometh, when thy the little ones. Viz. of the flock: cf. Jer. xlix. 20=l. 45.

8, 9. The prophet here deserts the figure of the flock, and speaks literally. Two-thirds of the people will perish, but one-third will survive: this, after having been further purified by severe trials, will form the loyal and devoted people of God. The doctrine of the purification of Israel through a judgement, and the preservation of a faithful remnant, is pre-eminently Isaiah's: see on Zeph. iii. 1 f.

The 'third part' may be a thought suggested by Ez. v. 2, 12.

and will smelt them as silver is smelted, and try them as gold is tried. Both figures of testing by severe trial, and removing, if they exist, ignoble elements. Cf. Is. i. 25 'and smelt away as in a furnace [כָּרַר, Is. xlviii. 10] thy dross'; Jer. vi. 29 'in vain the smelter smelteth, for the evil are not separated,' ix. 7 'Behold, I will smelt them, and try them'; Ps. lxvi. 10 'For thou hast tried us, O God, thou hast smelted us, as silver is smelted.'

they shall call on my name, and I will answer them. A mark of the changed relations between them and God: they will be forward to call upon Him, and He will be ready to answer them (cf. Is. lviii. 9, lxv. 24). 'To call on,' both here and elsewhere, is properly 'to call with,' i.e. to use the name in invocations.

I will say, &c. Another sign of the mutual harmony and cordiality established between the purified remnant and Yahweh; cf. Hos. ii. 23; also ch. viii. 8.

xiv. The deliverance of Jerusalem from the heathen: and its elevation into a centre of monotheism for the world. Another assault upon Jerusalem is here described. The nations this time capture the city, and half of its population is taken into captivity (vv. 1, 2): Yahweh next appears, in order to fight against the assailants, and rescue the remainder; He stands upon the Mount of Olives, which is rent in sunder beneath Him by an earthquake, and through the chasm the fugitives escape (vv. 3-5). Thereupon spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will <sup>2</sup> gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished: and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. Then shall the LORD go forth, and fight against <sup>3</sup> those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of <sup>4</sup> Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very

the Messianic age commences: the light is perpetual, and the air is serene (vv. 6 f.): the territory of Judah sinks and becomes a well-watered plain, Jerusalem alone retaining its former elevation, conspicuous from afar, a goal to the nations for their annual pilgrimage at the feast of Booths, and holy entirely to Yahweh (vv. 8-21). The prophecy is largely in substance a résumé of older prophecies of a glorious future, combined into a single picture, and expected to be shortly fulfilled (notice 'is coming' in v. 1).

1. Behold, a day is coming for Yahweh. A day when He will manifest Himself in judgement. Cf. on Zeph. i. 7.

and thy spoil, &c. The pronouns in the Heb. are fem., showing that Jerusalem is addressed. The prophet, instead of adhering to strict chronological order, and beginning with a description of the assault and capture of the city, starts with a picture of the enemy partitioning their spoil in the midst of it.

2. all nations. The expression shows that the prophet has in view an ideal attack upon the Holy City: cf. on xii. 1.

rifled. The word generally rendered spoiled (Is. xiii. 16).

ravished. The usual concomitant of the sack of a city in ancient times: cf. again Is. xiii. 16.

3. Yahweh will appear, to fight against the assailants, and secure the safety of that half of the population which still remained in the city (v. 2 end).

fought. Better, fighteth, viz. on whatever the occasion may be.

battle. Not the usual Heb. word, but an Aramaic word, found elsewhere only Ps. lv. 18 (?; see RVm.), 21, lxviii. 30, lxxviii. 9, cxliv. 1, Job xxxviii. 23, Eccl. ix. 18 (in 2 S. xvii. 11 read in their midst with LXX, Pesh., Vulg.).

4. shall cleave. Cf. the pictures of the mountains quaking or melting before Yahweh, Jud. v. 5, Nah. i. 5, Ps. xcvii. 5.

to the valley: the cleft, running from W. to E., described in v. 4. My mountains and the mountains, if the text is sound, must be the mountains just formed, by the Mount of Olives being cleft in twain. LXX, Targ., Symm., and the Oriental MSS. of the Hebrew text, read for the first 'and ye shall flee,' &c. 'and the valley of my mountains shall be stopped up' (וַיִּסְתְּמוּ for וַיִּסְתְּמוּ). The avoidance of the double 'and ye shall flee' is some improvement; but otherwise this reading has no advantage over the Heb., nor does it agree with the next clause, even though with We. we alter further and read, 'And the valley of Hinnom shall be stopped up.' Marg.<sup>o</sup> (so Targ., Syr.) requires a change of text.

the earthquake, &c. The one mentioned in the title of the Book of Amos (Am. i. 1), c. 750 B. C. The allusion is probably an archaistic trait: for a living memory of an event which happened some 400 years previously could hardly have been current among the people.

and Yahweh, &c. Yahweh, attended by all His angels (read with LXX, 'with him' for 'with thee'), will now 'come,' i. e. apparently come nearer, or enter Jerusalem, to complete the defeat of His foes, and establish His kingdom. The picture, as elsewhere in the prophets (cf. Joel iii. 14-16), is in parts incomplete: it is not said, for example, what happens afterwards to those who escape through the cleft in the Mount of Olives.

the holy ones. I. e. the angels, as Job v. 1, Ps. lxxxix. 5, 7, Dan. iv. 13, viii. 13.

6-7. In the glorious future, then to begin, there will be no extremes of temperature, and perpetual light will prevail. Cf. Is. iv. 6, xxx. 26, lx. 20; also Rev. xxii. 5, 2 Esdr. vii. 39 42.

6. A very uncertain verse. RV. (based on the Heb. marg.) is come to pass in that day, that <sup>a</sup>the light shall not be <sup>b</sup>with brightness and with gloom: but it shall be one day; which is known unto the LORD; not day, and not night: but it shall come to pass, that at evening time there shall very improbable<sup>1</sup>: the glorious ones<sup>2</sup> will be thickened (condensed, or congealed) is a possible rendering of the Heb. text, but yields a poor and doubtful sense<sup>3</sup>: the statement 'there shall not be light' seems also to conflict with v. 7 end. Perhaps We., Now., Marti are right in reading, there shall be neither heat (חום for אור) nor cold (קרה for קרה: so LXX, Syr., Targ., Symm., Vulg.) nor frost (קפא: so Heb. marg., and the same versions: cf. the cogn. verb, Ex. xv. 8), i. e. there will be no extremes of heat and cold, the day will be of an equable temperature (cf. 2 Esdr. vii. 41).

6. And it shall be one day (i. e. one long continuous day); it (emph.) is known to Yahweh, i. e. either known to Him, but not to us (Dt. xxix. 29), or (Keil) noted or regarded by Him above other days.

not day, and not night, &c. I. e. with no interchange of light and darkness, but wholly light: even at nightfall there will be still light. Cf. Is. lx. 20.

7. A further trait. Perennial streams flowing E. and W. of Jerusalem will irrigate and fertilize the whole land. The greater part of Judah, except for occasional wells, is practically waterless (Smith, Hist. Geogr. of the Holy Land, p. 307): the high central part is mostly a stony moorland; rounded and barren limestone hills line many of the wádys; the descent to Jordan and the Dead Sea is down stony wádys, or over the rocky and desolate 'wilderness of Judah.' Hence the prophets picture its irrigation in the ideal future by copious streams. Cf. Is. xxx. 25; and esp.

<sup>3</sup> It is supposed to mean the stars (cf. the same word glorious of the moon in Job xxxi. 36) will draw in their light; but the metaph. use of thickened is very doubtful (see how the word is actually used, Ex. xv. 8, Zeph. i. 12, Job x. 10), and there is also a grammatical anomaly (see, however, Is. xlix. 11, and G.-K. § 146<sup>u</sup>). RVm. is a questionable paraphrase of this.

8 be light. And it shall come to pass in that day, that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the eastern sea, and half of them toward the 9 western sea: in summer and in winter shall it be. And the LORD shall be king over all the earth: in that day 10 shall the LORD be one, and his name one. All the land shall be turned as the Arabah, from Geba to Rimmon

Ez. xlvii, the source no doubt both of the representation here and of Joel iii. 18: also Rev. xxii. 1 f.

living waters. I. e., as regularly in Heb., moving, running waters: see Gen. xxvi. 19 RVm.; Lev. xiv. 5 RVm., &c.

the eastern (lit. the front) sea. I. e. the Dead Sea. So Ez. xlviii. 17; Joel ii. 20. In fixing the quarters of the heavens the Hebrews thought of themselves as turning towards the East.

the western (lit. the hinder) sea. I. e. the Mediterranean Sea. So Dt. xi. 24, xxxiv. 2; Joel ii. 20.

in summer, &c. The streams will be perennial: they will not, like many of the streams in Palestine, fail in the hot summers.

9. Yahweh will then be the one King, and the one God, of the whole earth.

shall Yahweh be one, and his name one. Universal monotheism will prevail: Yahweh, the true God, will no longer be confused with other gods; there will no longer be gods bearing many names: Yahweh will be everywhere recognized as one, and all worship will be Yahweh-worship.

10. The territory of Judah generally,—which is mostly a mountainous country, rising up gradually from the Mediterranean Sea on the W., and more precipitously from the Dead Sea (1,292 feet below the Mediterranean Sea) on the E., to the central ridge (in which Jerusalem is 2,500 feet, and Hebron 3,000 feet, above the Mediterranean Sea),—will then sink and become a plain, Jerusalem alone remaining at its former elevation, and so rising majestically out of it. The physical elevation of Jerusalem is a material expression of the spiritual pre-eminence of the religion of Zion; and is a trait pretty clearly derived from Is. ii. 2 f. = Mic. iv. 1 f. (where the Temple hill, exalted above other mountains, and visible from afar, attracts the gaze of distant nations, and is the goal of their pilgrimages).

as the 'Arābāh. I. e. like the level floor of the great trough or depression through which the Jordan flows (Dt. i. 1 RVm.), once, in ages long before the appearance of man upon the globe, the site of an inland sea, the deposits from which formed originally the floor of the 'Arabah.

Geba<sup>4</sup>. Now Jeba, 6 miles NE. of Jerusalem, on the S. edge of the steep Wādy Suweinit (cf. 1 S. xiii. 3, 16, xiv. 5); mentioned in 2 K. xxiii. 8 as a point on the S. border of the Northern kingdom, and here as one on the N. border of Judah.

Rimmon. No doubt, the place called 'En-Rimmon ('Rimmon's spring') in Neh. xi. 29, and the corrected text of Jos. xv. 32, xix. 7, 1 Chr. iv. 32; probably the modern Umm er-rumāmin, 9 miles N. of Beer-sheba, and about 35 miles SW. of Jerusalem.

dwell. Or, sit, i. e. be inhabited; cf. xii. 6.

from Benjamin's gate. This was a gate leading into the territory of Benjamin (see Jer. xxxvii. 13, and cf. v. 12); it must have been consequently in the N. wall of the city; from the present passage it may be inferred that it was at the E. end of this wall. The 'gate of Ephraim' (2 K. xiv. 13; Neh. viii. 16, xii. 39), with which it has been identified, seems to have been more nearly at the centre of the N. wall.

the first gate. Obscure: perhaps the same as the 'corner gate.' Or perhaps the former gate (note 'the place of'), i. e. some gate disused at the time when the prophet wrote.

the corner gate (2 K. xiv. 13; 2 Chr. xxvi. 9; Jer. xxxi. 38): this was 400 cubits (700 feet) to the W. of the gate of Ephraim (2 K. i. c.), and stood no doubt at the NW. corner of the city.

and from the tower of Hānan'ēl. To judge from Neh. iii. 1, xii. 39, a tower in or near the NE. corner of the city walls, not far from the gate of Benjamin.

to the king's wine-vats. Probably near the 'king's garden' and pool of Shiloah (Neh. iii. 15), at the SE. corner of the city, not far from the former royal palace. The verse thus specifies two of the former boundaries of the city, one on the N., and one on the E., within which, after its elevation, it will still be inhabited as of old. Cf. Jer. xxxi. 38, where Jeremiah promises that Jerusalem shall be rebuilt from the tower of Hānan'ēl unto the corner gate, meaning thereby to indicate the line of its N. wall.

11. The inhabitants will not again have to go into exile, as had lately (v. 2) been their lot; nor will the 'ban' again fall upon it, as it had done in the past (Is. xliii. 28 [read the past tenses, as in RVm.]; and in the threat, Jer. xxv. 9). Cf. Rev. xxii. 3.

ban. Fig. for destruction. To 'ban' (the cognate verb is usually in RV. rendered by 'devote,' or by 'utterly destroy,' with 'devote' in the margin) was to devote to Yahweh for destruction: it was especially put in force against heathen people or cities, after they had been conquered. See Nu. xxi. 2; Dt. ii. 34, vii. 2; Josh. vi. 17, 18, 21; 1 S. xv. 3, 8; and cf. 'Curse' in DB.

12-15. The prophet now comes back to describe the destruction of the nations who had been warring against Jerusalem (vv. 2-3).

12. An appalling plague falls upon them: they are smitten, as they stand, into mouldering corpses.

plague. I. e. πληγή, a severe stroke or blow (cognate with the verb rendered 'smite'), not necessarily (see 2 S. xviii. 7 'slaughter'), though it is so in the present case, a 'plague' in the modern sense of the word (cf. Nu. xvi. 48-50, xxv. 8, 9; 2 S. xxiv. 21).

consume away (each time). Moulder (Is. xxxiv. 4 RVm.), or rot; in Is. iii. 24, v. 24, the cognate subst. is rendered rottenness. In the Heb. the pronouns 'their,' 'they,' from 'their flesh' to 'their tongue,' are all singular, individualizing the description.

13, 14. A great panic will seize them, causing them in their bewilderment to slay one another; and their wealth will become the spoil of the Jews. Cf. Jud. vii. 22; 1 S. xiv. 20; 2 Chr. xx. 23; and esp. Ez. xxxviii. 21 (in the picture of the rout of the hosts of Gog after their assault upon the land of Israel).

14. And Judah also. In distinction from, if not (see the next note) in opposition to, Jerusalem: cf. xii. 2<sup>b</sup>, 7.

against (or in) Jerusalem. I. e. either (We., Now., Smith, and so. I. e. like the plague of v. 12, which is also referred to by 'this plague' at the end of the verse. The close connexion of v. 15 with v. 12, and esp. the words 'so' and 'this,' give some colour to the suggestion that vv. 13, 14 are not original here, but have been introduced by a later writer from the point of view of ch. xii ('against Jerusalem' being in this case the meaning in v. 14).

16-19. The effects of this judgement upon Israel's foes. Those who survive of the nations will become worshippers of Yahweh, and keep the feast of Booths every year at Jerusalem (v. 16). Drought, or some equivalent misfortune, will be the punishment of any nation which neglects this pilgrimage (vv. 17-19). With the general thought of the passage, cf. Is. lxvi. 18, 19, 20, 23 (effects of the judgement described in vv. 15-17 upon the nations).

the King. Absolutely, the Sovereign of the world. The feast—or, strictly (p. 140), the pilgrimage—of Booths (Lev. xxiii. 34; Dt. xvi. 13-16), also called the feast of Ingathering (Ex. xxiii. 16=xxxiv. 22), was pre-eminently an occasion of thanksgiving for harvest and vintage (Dt. l. c.). It is mentioned, probably, partly as the most important of the three annual pilgrimages of the Jews (Ex. xxiii. 14, 15-17=xxxiv. 18, 22, 23; Dt. xvi. 13-17),—it is sometimes spoken of absolutely as 'the pilgrimage' (1 K. viii. 2, 65; Ez. xlv. 25; Neh. viii. 14),—partly because it was the feast at which the nations could give direct expression to their own religious thankfulness for the fruits of the earth, and partly (Wellh.) because at the time when the prophecy was written the yearly pilgrimage to Jerusalem was an important agency for keeping alive the connexion of the Diaspora with the capital, and so it would naturally be thought of as a means for promoting the same end in the case of the nations also.

17. there shall be no rain. The feast of Booths being an expression of thankfulness for the year's produce, the neglect of it is appropriately punished by the withholding of the rain upon which the crops depend (cf. Am. iv. 7). The failure of rain naturally implies other ills: not only scarcity of food, but disease, mortality among men and cattle, &c.

18. neither, &c. The rend. of RV. implies such an elliptical and strangely expressed text, and that of RVm. is so forced and unnatural, that we can hardly be wrong in reading with LXX, Syr. (see RVm.), upon them shall be the plague wherewith, &c. The prophet recollects that the punishment threatened in v. 17 would not affect Egypt (where rain is very rare (cf. Hdt. ii. 13 f., iii. 10), the soil being fertilized not by the rainfall, but by the annual rising of the Nile); but, he adds, its people will not escape: the same 'plague' of scarcity, famine, disease, &c. which is to affect other nations will affect them also, though it will be due, it is implied, not to the failure of rain, but to the failure of the annual rising of the Nile.

19. punishment. Lit. 'sin,' but regarded here as including its consequences; cf. Nu. xxxii. 23, and 'iniquity' in Gen. iv. 13, 2 K. vii. 9.

 in Judah shall be holy unto the LORD of hosts: and all they that sacrifice shall come and take of them, and seethe

20-21. The final and crowning trait in the picture: the holiness of Jerusalem. This is a frequent feature in the prophets' delineations of the ideal future: see e. g. Is. iv. 3; Jer. xxxi. 40 (cf. v. 38, cited above on v. 10); Is. lx. 21, lxii. 12; Joel iii. 17.

20. Even horses, which, as used principally for warlike purposes, were viewed with disfavour by the prophets, and threatened with extinction in Jerusalem (ix. 10; Is. ii. 7; Mic. v. 10), will now be withdrawn from secular uses, and consecrated to Yahweh.

Holy unto Yahweh. The same inscription which was on the turban of the High-Priest (Ex. xxviii. 36).

the pots. Such as were used either for removing ashes from the altar of burnt offering (Ex. xxvii. 3; 1 K. vii. 40 RVm., 45), or (see v. 21) for boiling sacrifices in. The bowls, or basons, were large vessels, used (see on ix. 15) for dashing the blood of the slain animals against the sides of the altar. The meaning therefore is, either that the altar pots, used only for mean purposes, will become as holy as the bowls used for the reception of the sacrificial blood; or (We., Now., Smith, Marti), as all the altar utensils would be holy alike (Ex. xl. 10; Lev. viii. 11), that on account of the crowd of pilgrims attending the feast of Booths (vv. 16-19), the boiling-pots will have to be 'like' the great altar-bowls in size, capacious enough to contain the sacrifices that would be required.

21. Not only this, however, but every pot in Jerusalem and Judah will be holy to Yahweh, and so available for the use of the crowds offering sacrifice. The general thought of the holiness of Jerusalem is here developed with special reference to the annual pilgrimages (v. 16 ff.), and the sacrifices by which they would naturally be accompanied.

and all they that sacrifice, &c. The pilgrims, in preparing their sacrifices, will be able to use any of the pots in Judah and Jerusalem, and not merely those belonging to the Temple.

therein: and in that day there shall be no more a

<sup>a</sup> Canaanite. According to Keil and others, mentioned as a type of an unclean person (cf. Is. lii. 1). But more probably the marg. is right (see Zeph. i. 11): the meaning then being that as any vessel in the country could now be used for sacred purposes, traffickers—perhaps actually Canaanites—with boiling-vessels for sale or hire would no longer have occasion to haunt the Temple, and desecrate it by their presence (cf. Mt. xxi. 12).

Additional Note on Zech. xi. 12, 13.

It may be worth while to place here the quotations in St. Matthew side by side with the Heb. text and the LXX.

Mt. xxvi. 15: And they weighed him thirty pieces of silver (ἀργύρια).

Zech. xi. 12 LXX: And they weighed as my hire thirty pieces of silver (ἀργυροῦς).

Zech. xi. 13 Heb.: And Yahweh said unto me, Cast it to the potter [Pesh.: into the treasury], the noble value that I was valued at (and dismissed) from them. And I took the thirty (pieces of) silver, and cast it [sic] into Yahweh's house, to the potter [Pesh.: into the treasury].

Zech. xi. 13 LXX: And the Lord said unto me, Let them down (κάθες αὐτοὺς) into the furnace (χωνευτήριον<sup>1</sup>), and I will see<sup>2</sup> whether it is approved (δόκιμον)<sup>3</sup>, as I [apparently B alone has 'it'] was approved for their sake (ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν). And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and threw them into the Lord's house, into the furnace.

Mt. xxvii. 9<sup>b</sup>, 10: And they took<sup>4</sup> the thirty pieces of silver, the value of him that had been valued, whom they valued [= who was valued] on the part of (RVm.: see Meyer) the children of Israel, and gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord commanded me.

§ 1. NAME OF THE PROPHET, AND CONTENTS OF HIS PROPHECY.

RESPECTING the person of Malachi nothing is known. The name does not occur elsewhere: and most recent scholars doubt whether it is really the personal name of the prophet. It is identical with the Heb. word for 'my messenger' in iii. 1. If it is a proper name, it can hardly mean 'my messenger,' but must be regarded as a shortened form for Malachiah<sup>1</sup>, 'messenger of Yah' (though this name also does not actually occur). But the LXX and the Targum do not recognize it as a proper name. The LXX in i. 1 have 'by the hand of his messenger' (מִלְאָכִי for מַלְאָכִי); and the Targum has, 'by the hand of my angel, whose name is called Ezra the scribe.' The tradition identifying the author of the prophecy with Ezra is mentioned also by Jerome (who accepts it) and other writers. Still, had Ezra been the author of the prophecy, it is difficult to think that his authorship would have been thus concealed<sup>2</sup>. From the similarity of the title, in form, to Zech. ix. 1, xii. 1 it is probable that it is due to the compiler of the volume of the Twelve Prophets<sup>3</sup>; and this, taken in conjunction with the some-

what prominent recurrence of the same word in iii. 1, has led to the conjecture that the prophecy, when it came to the compiler's hands, had no author's name attached to it, and that he prefixed to it a title suggested by iii. 1, the 'messenger' there spoken of being either supposed by him to be the prophet himself, or understood by him to be a term descriptive of his office, and so capable of being applied to him symbolically (Ewald, Kuenen, Stade, Wellh., Nowack, Smith, &c.).

Contents of the Prophecy. The prophecy falls naturally into seven paragraphs or sections, the contents of which may be summarized as follows :—

(1) i. 2-5 (Exordium). To those who asked whether Yahweh still loved Israel, the prophet replies by pointing to the contrasted lots of Israel and Edom : in vain may Esau's descendants expect a restoration of their ruined country.

(2) i. 6—ii. 9. Israel, however, is unmindful of this love, and does not render to Yahweh the honour and reverence which are His due. Especially the priests are neglectful of their duties, allowing blemished and inferior animals to be presented upon the altar, and bringing thereby the service of Yahweh into contempt (i. 6-14). The priests are unworthy of their ancestry : unless they amend their ways, Yahweh will send His curse upon them, and they will be openly disgraced before all the people (ii. 1-9).

(3) ii. 10-16. A rebuke addressed to those who had divorced their own wives and contracted marriages with foreign women : such practices, the prophet declares, are inconsistent with the love and faithfulness which, as children of one Father, they all owe to one another, besides imperilling Israel's distinctive nationality.

(4) ii. 17—iii. 6. In reply to those who questioned God's justice, and complained that evil-doers enjoyed Yahweh's favour and prospered, Malachi announces the approach of passages. The compiler, having reached the end of Zech. i-viii, had still, we may suppose, three prophecies in his hands to incorporate, viz. those now known as 'Zech.' ix-xi, xii-xiv, and 'Malachi' (the first two of which were in any case anonymous); and he framed the titles of Zech. xii-xiv and Malachi on the model of the opening words—or, if the conjecture mentioned on p. 236 is correct, the title,—of Zech. ix-xi.

a day of judgement, when Yahweh will appear 'suddenly,' firstly to purify the unworthy priests, that they may offer pure and acceptable sacrifices, and secondly to purge the land of sinners in general.

(5) iii. 7-12. The neglect of the people in paying tithes and other dues has been visited by Yahweh with drought, locusts, and failure of crops: let these dues be conscientiously paid, and the visitations will cease, and the land again be abundantly blessed.

(6) iii. 13-iv. 3. A section among the people—no doubt, the murmurers addressed in ii. 17-iii. 6,—complain that 'it is vain to serve God'; for no distinction is made between the evil and the good. The day is coming, replies the prophet, 'burning as an oven,' when Yahweh will distinguish between them quite clearly; the workers of wickedness will be consumed, and the righteous will triumph over their fall.

(7) iv. 4-6. Conclusion. The prophecy concludes with an exhortation to obey the requirements of the Mosaic law, and with a promise of the advent of Elijah the prophet, to move, if possible, the people to repentance, and thereby to avert the threatened judgement.

§ 2. HISTORY OF THE TIMES, AND DATE OF MALACHI.

It is evident that the prophecy of Malachi belongs to the period after the Captivity, when Judah was a Persian province (notice in i. 8 'thy governor (Heb. pehāh),' as Hag. i. 1, Neh. v. 14, xii. 16, &c.), when the Temple had been rebuilt (i. 10, iii. 1, 10), and public worship was again carried on in it. It will be a help, however, in the effort to determine its date more precisely, and also contribute to illustrate the condition of the people at the time when it was written, if we survey briefly what is known of the history of Judah during the years that began with the completion of the Second Temple.

The Second Temple was completed in 516 B.C., two years after the date of Zechariah's final prophecy (Zech. vii, viii). Between Ezra vi, in which its dedication is described (viz. 16-18), and Ezr. vii there is a gap of nearly sixty years (included in the words 'after these things,' vii. 1), during which the history of Judah is virtually a blank. All in fact that we know of this period is that at the beginning of Xerxes' reign (485-65) the Samaritans made unfriendly representations respecting the Jews at the Persian court (Ezr. iv. 6). In the seventh year of Artaxerxes (465-25), however (B.C. 458), Ezra, the priest and scribe, received permission from the Persian king to return from Babylon to Jerusalem, to inquire into the religious condition of the country, and to take with him as many of the Jews still in exile as chose to accompany him (Ezr. vii. 6-8, 14, &c.). Ezra started upon his mission with many marks of the royal favour. Offerings were sent by the king to the Temple: the treasurers of the satrapy to which Jerusalem belonged were instructed to assist him with funds: and the priests and Levites and other Temple officials were exempted from the payment of taxes. About 1,750 Jews availed themselves of the permission to return with Ezra. The incidents of the return are told in Ezr. viii. It was not many days after Ezra's arrival that his reforming spirit began to display itself. The princes of the people called his attention to the prevalence of intermarriage with the heathen people of the land, which was threatening to destroy the distinctive character of the nation: if we may judge from the horror displayed by him at the intelligence (Ezr. ix. 3 f.), Ezra had no idea of the extent to which the practice had spread. His own feeling on the matter quickly infected the people: a number of the better-minded members of the community came forward and offered him their support: three days afterwards a public assembly was held; a commission of elders was appointed to inquire into the facts; and such as had contracted foreign marriages—among whom are mentioned in particular many priests and Levites—were compelled to put away their wives (Ezr. x).

At this point the memoirs of Ezra abruptly end; and for thirteen years we again know but little directly about the internal affairs of Judah. It was in all probability, however, during this interval that the events recorded in Ezr. iv. 7-23 took place<sup>1</sup>. The Jews set about rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem; but the Samaritans made such strong representations at the Persian court of the mischief which might ensue, if the work were allowed to proceed, that they were obliged to desist. Forcible measures were indeed, we are told (Ezr. iv. 23), used against them; and the dismantled walls and burnt gates, described by Nehemiah in 445 (Neh. i. 3), seem, at least in part, to have been the result.

The Book of Nehemiah opens in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, B.C. 445. In this year Nehemiah, Artaxerxes' cup-bearer, hearing of the ruined state of the walls of Jerusalem, and the unhappy condition of the restored community, obtained permission to proceed to Jerusalem as governor, and rebuild the walls of the city. Nehemiah's own memoirs describe graphically how, upon his arrival at Jerusalem, he induced a number of the leading families to co-operate with him, and how, in spite of the efforts of Sanballat and others to arrest the progress of the work, the restoration of the walls was completed within the space of fifty-two days (Neh. ii-iv, vi). The walls finished, Nehemiah at once applied himself to relieve the distress which pressed heavily upon a considerable section of the community. Many of the poorer Jews had been compelled by the bad seasons to mortgage their lands in order to get food, or to pay the Persian tribute; and some, not having the means to pay their creditors, had been obliged to sell their children as slaves. Nehemiah summoned an assembly; and induced the wealthy money-lenders to restore the lands of their poorer brethren, and to reduce or forgo the interest which they had been exacting (Neh. v). Shortly afterwards (Neh. viii), on the first and second days of the seventh month (Tishri), B.C. 444, Ezra (who now suddenly reappears), at the request of the people, read the 'book of the law' in a public assembly, Nehemiah and a number of Levites standing by him and assisting. The reading deeply impressed those who heard it; and it was continued during the seven days (the fifteenth to the twenty-first of Tishri) of the feast of Booths. On the twenty-fourth of the same month a solemn fast was held; and the people, separating themselves from all foreigners, assembled again for a great national act of humiliation and confession (Neh. ix). This ended, they pledged themselves by a covenant to obey the law, undertaking in particular, (a) to avoid marriages with foreigners, (b) to do no trade on the Sabbath or other holy day, (c) to observe the sabbatical year and its remission of debt, (d) to pay a poll-tax of  $\frac{1}{3}$  shekel for the maintenance of the Temple services, (e) to pay tithes and firstfruits to the Levites (Neh. x). Soon afterwards (Neh. xii. 27-43) the restored walls were dedicated with universal rejoicings.

Nehemiah's furlough, it seems, was now at an end, and he had to return to the Persian court. Twelve years later, in 432, he visited Jerusalem again (Neh. xiii. 4-31). In spite of the solemn promises made by the people in 444, he found that in the interval the old abuses and irregularities had revived. A grandson of the high-priest, Eliashib, had married a daughter of Sanballat, the Horonite (xiii. 28; see ii. 10); the Ammonite, Tobiah (ii. 10, vi. 18), was also connected by marriage with Eliashib; and a chamber in the Temple court, in which tithes and other dues had formerly been stored, had been appropriated to his use. The Levites had not received the dues to which they were entitled; they had consequently retired to their fields in the country, and the Temple services were not properly kept up. Nehemiah rectified these abuses, and also took measures to secure the observance of the Sabbath, protested strongly against the marriages with foreign women—in particular, with women of Ashdod, Ammon, and Moab—which were still in vogue,

A comparison of the terms in which Malachi speaks with the condition of Judah as disclosed in this survey leaves no doubt that his prophecy, speaking generally, belongs to the age of Ezra and Nehemiah. The Temple has been restored: but years enough have passed to disappoint the fervid hopes held out in 520 by Haggai and Zechariah of the position which Judah would assume, as soon as its restoration was completed. The priesthood has become lax and degenerate; there have been numerous marriages with foreign women; and the laity have shown great remissness in the payment of tithes and other sacred dues. These abuses, especially the second and the third, are just those which, as we have seen, Ezra, and particularly Nehemiah, found prevalent in Judah, and set themselves energetically to correct. Is it, however, possible to fix Malachi's date more precisely? Malachi certainly attacked the same abuses that Ezra and Nehemiah did: but did he, for instance, prepare the way for Ezra's reform of 458, or for the covenant to which Ezra and Nehemiah jointly bound the people in 444, or for the reforms instituted by Nehemiah at his second visit in 432? That he wrote while Nehemiah was governor of Jerusalem is improbable, on account of i. 8, which implies that gifts were offered to the 'governor,' whereas Nehemiah tells us that he refused to accept any (Neh. v. 15, 18). From the close similarity between the abuses attacked by Malachi and those which Nehemiah found at his visit in 432 (neglect of the Temple services, the non-payment of tithes, and mixed marriages), it has been argued that he prophesied shortly before this date. On the other hand, though Ezra mentions only the mixed marriages, the other abuses may well have prevailed before; the terms of the covenant entered into in 444 (Neh. x. 34 ff.) imply that there had already been remissness in the payment of sacred dues: and other considerations point in the direction of an earlier date. The code accepted by the people in 444 clearly included the Priestly law of the Pentateuch (see Neh. viii. 13-18, x. 32-39): Malachi, however, uses terms suggested by Deuteronomy (see on ii. 2, 4, iii. 5, 10, iv. 4), and does not betray that familiarity with the Priestly Code which might be expected in one who wrote after 444. It is true, in commanding (iii. 10) the whole tithe to be paid into the Temple, Malachi agrees with the Priestly Code against Deuteronomy (see the note on iii. 8): but it is pointed out that, even supposing that the payment of tithe to the sanctuary was first codified in 444, it does not follow that the practice first began then: the legislation of P constantly attaches itself to pre-existent usage: so that this passage of Malachi is not decisive for a date later than 444. Whether Malachi prophesied also before the arrival of Ezra in 458 it seems impossible to determine. When Ezra arrived in Jerusalem he found that the question of foreign marriages had already been vexing the heads of the community (Ezr. ix. 1); so Malachi may have been one of those who had been rousing the attention of the people to the subject. On the other hand, he may also have prophesied shortly before the arrival of Nehemiah in 445. Certainly Ezra's words made a deep impression upon the people, and many mixed marriages were repudiated in consequence (Ezr. ix-x); but we do not know how far the reform reached, or how long it was before the evil began to revive, as it certainly had revived, when Nehemiah visited Jerusalem in 432 (Neh. xiii. 23-28). There may thus have been sufficient occasion for Malachi's words upon the subject even after 458. The data, it must be evident, point in different directions; and materials for a confident conclusion do not exist. Recent authorities, laying stress chiefly on the Deuteronomic expressions of Malachi, are in favour of a date shortly before 458<sup>1</sup>. We must be content to know that the prophet was a contemporary of Ezra and Nehemiah ; and to feel sure that he supported those reformers, and insisted independently upon the importance of their work.

§ 3. SCOPE AND CHARACTER OF MALACHI'S PROPHECY.

The moral and spiritual temper of Judah when Malachi came forward to prophesy may be gathered partly from particulars mentioned in the preceding survey, partly from allusions contained in the prophecy itself. The feeling prevalent in Judah at the time was one of depression and discontent. The expectations which earlier prophets had aroused had not been realized. The return from Babylon had not been followed by the ideal glories promised by the Second Isaiah ; the completion of the Temple had not, as Haggai and Zechariah had promised, brought in the Messianic age ; Jerusalem, instead of its population overflowing on all sides (Zech. ii. 4), was thinly inhabited (Neh. vii. 4, xi. 1), and, till 445, largely a ruin (Neh. i. 3, ii. 3, 17) ; bad harvests (Mal. iii. 11), troubles from neighbours (Ezr. iv. 7-23 ; cf. Neh. iv. 2 ff.), and general poverty (Neh. v) increased the disheartenment. A spirit of carelessness and indifference prevailed widely among the people. Many, for example,—and here the priests were the chief offenders,—forgetful of the honour and reverence which were His due, treated Yahweh's altar with contempt, offering upon it cheap or blemished sacrifices (i. 6-8, 13, 14) : in other respects, also, the priests had declined from the high ideal of their office ; they performed its duties pp. 337 f.) ; Wellh., Nowack, Marti (before 458) : A. B. Davidson also (The Exile and the Restoration, pp. 88 ff.) places Malachi before Ezra and Nehemiah. Kuenen (Eintl. § 84. 8-10) and Kirkpatrick (pp. 497 f.) prefer c. 432. Kuenen observes that, even though Malachi wrote after the Priestly Code was accepted, he may still have used the older and more familiar Deuteronomic expressions.

perfunctorily; they were open to bribery; they permitted to one what they refused to another; uprightness and impartiality were not, as they should have been, the ruling principles of their life (ii. 6, 7, 8, 9<sup>b</sup>). The people generally were remiss in the payment of tithes and other sacred dues (iii. 8). Divorce also was abnormally prevalent; a man, when the 'wife of his youth' no longer pleased him, repudiated her, heedless of the suffering inevitably entailed by such heartless and unnatural behaviour (ii. 10, 13-16). At the same time marriages with foreign women—perhaps, in particular, with women belonging to the Samaritans and other neighbours of the Jews, who had not been disturbed from their homes, and were wealthier and better off than the colonists who had returned from Babylon—were now in fashion, and threatened to obliterate the distinctive character of the nation (ii. 11, 12; also Ezr. ix-xi, Neh. xiii. 23-29). There were besides 'sorcerers, adulterers, false swearers,' as well as those of whom the prophets in the past had so often complained, men belonging to the well-to-do classes, who nevertheless looked down coldly upon all beneath them, and scrupled not to withhold the wages of the hired servant, and to oppress in different ways 'the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow' (iii. 5)<sup>1</sup>. In consequence, no doubt, of the troubles and social wrongs which they saw about them, there arose a party who, though they observed the forms of religion (iii. 14), were deficient in spirituality, and impatient because their religious observances brought them no advantage; who gave way consequently to sceptical thoughts, who doubted, for instance, whether Yahweh had any real 'love' for Israel (i. 2), who argued that it was vain to serve Him, for the righteous had no advantage over the wicked, and who asked, 'Where is the God of judgement?' (ii. 17, iii. 14 f.). In contrast to these three classes of the indifferent, the 'proud' (iii. 15), and the doubters, there was the seemingly small circle of loyal and pious servants of Yahweh, who clung together, and did their best to reassure one another with thoughts of trust and hope (iii. 16). Malachi, in Yahweh's name, comes forward emphatically as one of these (iii. 17 f.); and his book is essentially an argument addressed to the various classes just mentioned. He points out the inconsistencies and unseemliness involved in the irreverence towards God, and in the practice of divorce; he recalls priests and laity alike to the ideals which they have forgotten; and he announces the speedy advent of a great and signal Day of Judgement, which will separate the good from the wicked, and satisfy the doubters,—a day when the degenerate priesthood will be purified, so that Judah's offerings will again, as of old, be acceptable to Yahweh, when the perjurers, the oppressors, and all others who work wickedness will be consumed, and left without 'root or branch' (iv. 1), but when the little group of His own pious worshippers will be owned by Him as the heirs of Israel's ideal privilege, even as His 'peculiar treasure,' and when their righteousness, shining forth as the sun, will bring them healing from their woes. Before, however, this Day of Judgement breaks, Elijah the prophet will be sent to heal dissensions in the nation (iv. 6), and to do what he can to prepare men for the advent of the Judge (iii. 1).

Though the word itself is not used, Malachi's theodicy is just Isaiah's doctrine of the preservation of a faithful 'remnant' (see on Zeph. iii. 11), applied and adapted to the circumstances of his own day. Malachi's descriptions of the ideal future are brief. Israel's sacrifices will be acceptable when the priesthood has been purified (iii. 3<sup>b</sup>, 4); prosperity, and the envious admiration of the nations, are promised if tithe and terūmah are duly paid (iii. 10<sup>b</sup>, 12); the pious worshippers of Yahweh will come forth from their hiding-places into light and happiness when their righteousness has been vindicated and the wicked have been exterminated (iii. 2, 3). The judgement, it has been observed, which Malachi looks forward to is confined to Israel; it is a sifting which removes the ungodly members of the theocracy: but the heathen world in general—with the one exception of Edom (i. 3, 4), which explains itself, and in spite of the prophet's strong condemnation of marriages with foreigners—is viewed by him on its better side (i. 11), and Israel is contrasted unfavourably with it (i. 12). Haggai and Zechariah, on the other hand, had both proclaimed the approaching fall of the powers of the world. The difference may be due partly to the fact that Haggai and Zechariah wrote when men still remembered the heavy yoke of Babylon, whereas Malachi lived under the benigner rule of Persia: but this will hardly be the entire explanation. Malachi has graver fault to find with his own people than those two prophets had; and the judgement which he announces is determined accordingly. And so we may notice that while Haggai and Zechariah promise that Yahweh will come to dwell in His Temple, as His people's protector (Zech. ii. 10, 12, viii. 3), Malachi declares that He will come to His Temple as His people's Judge (iii. 1 ff., iv. 1).

Like the other prophets, Malachi aims at recalling his people to moral and religious earnestness. But the means adopted by him are not those followed generally by the other prophets. Malachi insists upon the importance of maintaining the purity of the public worship of God, and the distinctive character of the nation. His book is remarkable among the writings of the prophets on account of the interest which it evinces in ritual observances, and the grave light in which it views ritual laxity.

The explanation is to be found in the circumstances of the time. The course of events since the restoration had made the Temple, with its high-priest and its sacrificial system, a centre for the community much more than it had been before : but this very fact had a providential significance in view of the future. It was essential for Israel's preservation as the people of God that the ceremonial obligations laid upon it should be strictly observed, and that it should hold itself aloof socially from its heathen neighbours. Malachi judged the times as the reformers Ezra and Nehemiah judged them. But he is no formalist ; his book breathes the genuine prophetic spirit ; he prophesies, as G. A. Smith has happily put it, ' within ' the law, but not ' under ' the law. Naturally men's neglect or observance of ritual rules was a measure of their regard for God : but what Malachi demands is not the observance of these rules in themselves, but the spirit of worship, of reverence, and of faithfulness, which finds expression in them : he enforces the claims of the law, but only in so far as its forms are the expression of that spirit : moral offences are strongly reprobated by him (iii. 5) ; and from the thought of the brotherhood of all Israelites, as children of one spiritual Father, he deduces the social duties which they owe to one another, and the wrongfulness of the selfish system of divorce prevalent in his day. The book of Malachi is an original and attractive one ; and we may be thankful that it has been preserved in the volume of the Twelve. Not only does it present us with the picture of a man of deep earnestness and incisive moral force contending boldly and independently against the abuses of his time, but it is, from a historical point of view, of great interest and value ; for it sheds much welcome light upon the social and religious condition of Judah at a time about which our other sources leave us in many respects imperfectly informed.

The style of Malachi is more prosaic than that of the prophets generally, though his sentences often fall into the rhythmical parallelism which is such a constant feature in the more elevated oratory of the prophets. He does not possess the eloquence or the imaginative power of some of the older prophets: but his words are always forcible and direct: and the similes and imagery which he uses are effective and to the point; e. g. i. 6, and especially iii. 2, 3, 17<sup>b</sup>, iv. 1, 2<sup>a</sup> (the 'sun of righteousness'), 2<sup>b</sup>, 3. He adopts also a novel literary form: first he states briefly the truth which he desires to enforce, then follows the objection which it is supposed to provoke, finally there comes the prophet's reply, reasserting and substantiating his original proposition (i. 2 f., 6, 7, ii. 13 f., 17, iii. 7, 8, 13). Thus in place of the rhetorical development of a subject, usual with the earlier prophets, there appears in Malachi a dialectic treatment by means of question and answer. It has been supposed that we have here the first traces of that method of exposition, which, in the schools that arose about this time, became ultimately the prevalent one.

MALACHI

THE <sup>a</sup>burden of the word of the LORD to Israel by 1 Malachi.

I have loved you, saith the LORD. Yet ye say, Wherein <sup>2</sup>

1. 1. Title. The oracle, &c. Cf. Zech. ix. 1, xii. 1, and see p. 285 n. On 'Malachi,' also, see p. 285.

2-5. The love of Yahweh towards Israel, which was questioned by some of Malachi's contemporaries, is manifest in the contrasted lots of Israel and Edom: in vain may Esau's descendants expect a restoration of their ruined country. The mode of developing a subject by question and answer is characteristic of Malachi; see p. 298.

2<sup>a</sup>. I have loved you. Yahweh's love of His people is emphasized especially in Hosea (iii. 1, ix. 15, xi. 1, 4, xiv. 4), and Deuteronomy (iv. 37, vii. 7, 8, 13, x. 15, xxiii. 5): see also Jer. xxxi. 3; 1 K. x. 9<sup>b</sup>; Is. xliii. 4, lxiii. 9 (cf. the writer's note on Dt. vii. 8).

Yet ye say, &c. In order to introduce the proof that Yahweh loved Israel, the prophet represents the people as raising an objection to the statement, which he then proceeds to meet.

2<sup>b</sup>, 3. The reference is to Jacob and Esau, not as individuals, but as representatives of the nations descended from them; in fact, it is the nations whom the prophet has really in his mind (cf. Am. i. 11, and Obad. 10, where the nation, Edom, is called Israel's 'brother,' and Obad. 6, where 'Esau' stands for Edom, just as 'Jacob' often in poetry stands for Israel). This sense is better brought out by RVm., Is not Esau Jacob's brother . . . ? yet I have loved Jacob, but Esau I have hated, than by RV. (= AV.) Was not . . . ? (There is no verb for either 'Was' or 'Is' in the Heb.). Israel and Edom were two neighbouring nations, sprung, according to tradition, from twin-brethren according to the flesh: standing thus in the same relation to Yahweh, it might have been expected that they would have been treated by

3 the LORD: yet I loved Jacob; but Esau I hated, and made his mountains a desolation, and gave his heritage

Him similarly. But in point of fact, while Yahweh loved Jacob, he 'hated,' or had no care for 'Esau'; and the prophet refers to some recent desolation of the territory of Edom in proof of his statement. The desolation referred to is probably the invasion of Edom by Nabataean Arabs, which obliged the Edomites to evacuate their own territory and find new settlements in the south of Judah (which was ever afterwards called 'Idumaea'; so e.g. in the N.T., as Mark iii. 8). The exact date of this invasion is not known; apart from the evidence supplied by the present passage (c. 460 B.C.), we only know that it must have been before B.C. 312, in which year Antigonos (p. 231), having driven Ptolemy Lagi out of Coele-Syria, sent an expedition against the Nabataeans, who were already settled in Petra (Diod. xix. 94-100; Schürer, i. 612 [Eng. Tr. i. 2. 349]). Nothing is known of a desolation of Edom by the Chaldaeans at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem in 586, which is supposed by some commentators to be referred to; besides, the nature of the allusion requires some occurrence more nearly within the prophet's own time.

The ground of Yahweh's different treatment of the two nations is to be found naturally in their different dispositions and religious aptitudes. We know indeed few details of the religion of Edom (see Nöldeke's art. 'Edom' in EB.); but so far as we can gather, the Edomites were a worldly, unspiritual people, as they were certainly in character fierce, undisciplined, and turbulent (cf. Jos. BJ. iv. 4, 1; v. 1). A border-nation to the Hebrews, allied closely by race, and speaking probably (for no Edomite inscriptions have hitherto been found) almost the same language, the Edomites were in genius and character,—and, as history proved, ultimately also in destiny,—utterly diverse from the Hebrews. Israel was the nation which had the higher and truer religious instincts, and was thus the better fitted to be Yahweh's 'servant' (Is. xli. 8, xlv. 1, &c.), and to be 'loved' by Him. It was thus 'a true instinct which led Israel to regard their "brother" as representative of that heathendom against which they had to realize their destiny in the world as God's own nation' (Smith, p. 350). The antagonism between the two nations often found expression not only in war, but also in mutual recriminations and jealousies: cf. Am. i. 11; Obad. 10-14, Ezek. xxxv. 5, 10, 12, 13, and Ps. cxxxvii. 7 (allusions to Edom's unfriendliness at the time when Jerusalem was taken by the Chaldaeans); Jer. xlix. 7-22; Lam. iv. 21, 22; Is. xxxiv, lxiii. 1-6. Malachi's appeal to the disaster which had lately befallen Edom, as proof of Yahweh's

Mal. i. 2<sup>b</sup>, 3<sup>a</sup> is quoted by St. Paul in Rom. ix. 13, also with reference to the contrasted religious experiences of the two nations: see Sanday-Headlam, Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, pp. 245 ff.; and Gore, The Argument of Romans ix-xi in Studia Biblica, iii. 37 ff.

3. jackals. Often mentioned as haunting deserted sites; cf. Is. xiii. 22, xxxiv. 13, and Jeremiah's expression 'a dwelling-place of jackals,' ix. 11, x. 22, xlix. 33, li. 37. Packs of jackals still do the same in Syria; for instance, about the ruins of Baalbek (Tristram, NHB. 111).

4, 5. Even though Edom rebuild its ruined homes, Yahweh will destroy them; and men will recognize that He is supreme even beyond Israel's own land.

4. Whereas. Rather, If, or (RVm.) Though.

beaten down. This sense is established by the Syr. rāsh: cf. Jer. v. 17. RVm. (=AV.) may be disregarded.

The border (i. e. territory) of wickedness. The lasting desolation of Edom will be evidence in men's eyes of the wickedness of its inhabitants, and of God's anger as resting upon it. For the expression, 'men shall call' (i. e. give a name, as witness to a fact), cf. Is. lx. 14, lxi. 6, lxii. 12.

Yahweh is great (RVm.) beyond the border of Israel. An ascription of praise to Yahweh, whose power is thus shown to be not limited to the territory of His own people.

i. 6—ii. 9. The prophet turns to address the priests, who do not pay Yahweh the honour and reverence which are His due: they allow blemished and inferior animals to be presented upon if then I be a father, where is mine honour? and if I be a master, where is my fear? saith the LORD of hosts unto you, O priests, that despise my name. And ye say, 7 Wherein have we despised thy name? Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar. And ye say, Wherein have we polluted thee? In that ye say, The table of the LORD is the altar; and the service of Yahweh is in consequence brought into contempt (i. 6-14). The priests are unworthy of their ancestry: unless they amend their ways Yahweh will send a curse upon them, and make them contemptible before all the people (ii. 1-9).

6. The prophet begins by stating two principles to which every one will naturally assent: the application to the priests appears only afterwards, and comes as a surprise.

A son, &c. Cf. the Fifth Commandment.

and a servant his master. We should probably, with LXX, insert feareth after 'a servant': the second clause will then exactly correspond to the fourth, as the first clause does to the third.

O priests, that despise my name. The application, made forcibly, and with a startling epithet attached. Yahweh's name is 'despised' by the indifference and irreverence with which His services were maintained.

And ye say, &c. The priests are supposed to be surprised at the imputation, and to ask for an explanation of it.

7. polluted: viz., as the third clause in the verse shows, by the disrespect with which they treated the services of the altar.

bread: i. e. sacrificial flesh,—an archaic expression, retained from the time when the sacrifice was actually regarded as the 'bread' or food of the Deity. Cf. Lev. iii. 11, 16, and (in the 'Law of Holiness') xxi. 6, 8, 17, 21, 22, xxii. 25; Ez. xlv. 7.

polluted thee. Perhaps, with LXX, Marti, we should read 'polluted it,' i. e. the 'bread.'

In that ye say, &c.: viz., not in so many words, but virtually, by treating Yahweh's table with irreverence.

The table: i. e. the altar, as Ez. xli. 22, xlv. 16. The reference is not to the 'table' of the shew-bread.

8. They are content to sacrifice to Yahweh, against the Law (Lev. xxii. 20, 21<sup>b</sup>-24, in the 'Law of Holiness'; Dt. xvii. 1), blemished or imperfect animals, such as their own Persian governor would not think of accepting as a present. In blind it is no evil : and when ye offer the lame and sick, it is no evil ! Present it now unto thy governor ; will he be pleased with thee ? or will he accept thy person ? saith the LORD of hosts. And now, I pray you, intreat the favour <sup>9</sup> of God, that he may be gracious unto us : this hath been <sup>a</sup> by your means : will he <sup>b</sup> accept any of your persons ? saith the LORD of hosts. be pleased with thee : perhaps with it (LXX [codd. AQ] ; We., Now., Marti) would be better ; cf. vv. 10, 13 'accept' (the offering), ii. 13<sup>b</sup> ('with acceptance'). The Hebrew for 'be pleased with' is the same as that rendered 'accept,' vv. 10, 13, and in the passive 'be accepted,' Lev. i. 4, vii. 18, xix. 7, xxii. 23, 25, 27 (cf. cognate words, vv. 19, 20, 21, 29 ; Lev. i. 3, xix. 5). 'To be pleased' or 'favourable' is the proper meaning of the word.

accept thy person : lit. 'lift up thy face,'—a common Heb. figure for 'receive favourably,' meaning properly, lift up the face of a suppliant : see e. g. 1 S. xxv. 35. The opposite expression is 'turn back the face,' 1 K. ii. 16.

9. intreat the favour, &c. The close of this verse and v. 10 seem to show that the words are meant, not as a serious exhortation to repentance (Hitz., We., Now.), but ironically (Keil, Orelli, Marti) : since your governor will not accept such offerings, entreat God's favour, and see whether He will !

this : the presenting of such unworthy offerings (vv. 7, 8<sup>a</sup>). For from your hand (marg.), cf. 'at (Heb. from) your hand,' vv. 10, 13, ii. 13 ; and Is. i. 12.

accept. Properly (v. 8), be favourable to : the word used with reference to sacrifices in Lev. i. 4, vii. 18, &c. (cited on v. 8), Ps. li, 16<sup>b</sup>.

an offering. Heb. minhāh, properly a complimentary present, or a present made to secure or retain goodwill (Gen. xxxii. 13, 20, xliii. 11; Jud. iii. 15, 17), or as a mark of allegiance (1 S. x. 27), offered, as something expected, by a political subject (2 S. viii. 2, 6; 2 K. xvii. 3, 4 al.); then of a tribute offered to God, both generally (including animals), Gen. iv. 3, 4, 5, 1 S. ii. 17, 29, iii. 14, xxvi. 19, and specifically (as always in the Priestly Code of the Pentateuch) of the 'meal-' or cereal-offering (e. g. Lev. ii; and repeatedly in Nu. xxviii-xxix). As the word, when used of a sacrifice, has this double sense, it is not always certain which is intended; hence there are many passages in which, where RV. has 'offering' or 'oblation' in the text, it has 'Or, meal-offering' on the margin (e. g. Am. v. 25; Jer. xiv. 12; Ps. xx. 3: see further DB., s.v. 'OFFERING,' 4). On the whole, however, in non-technical passages, or where there is nothing to suggest the limitation to 'meal-offerings,' the presumption is that it is used in the general sense of 'offering' or 'oblation': so, for instance, Is. i. 13, xix. 21, and here, as also in the sequel, vv. 11, 13 [where clearly animals are included], ii. 12, 13, iii. 3, 4.

11, 12. The reason for v. 10<sup>b</sup>. Yahweh has no pleasure in Israel's offerings (v. 10<sup>b</sup>), for, while He is honoured among the Gentiles (v. 11), Israel dishonours Him (v. 12). The actual reason for v. 10<sup>b</sup> is given in v. 12, v. 11 being introduced merely to bring out the contrast between the reverence shown by the Gentiles and the irreverence of Israel. Malachi must have recognized a spirit of monotheism in heathen religions, and allowed that offerings rendered to a God recognized as one were rendered to Yahweh. He may have generalized from the doctrines of the Persian religion, which were certainly purer and more spiritual than those of heathenism generally. The passage is a tribute to the truer and better side of heathen religion, a recognition of the fact that 'in every nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable to Him' (Acts x. 35). 'The book of Malachi even recognizes in the religious earnestness of the Gentiles a form of devotion which Yahweh is willing to accept' (Ottley, Religion of Israel, p. 161).

AV. (whence RVm. 'shall be') interpreted the verse of the future; and so most of the older expositors understood it to refer to the future acceptance of Israel's religion by the nations. But though of course this thought would be in harmony with what is taught elsewhere by the prophets (see on Zech. ii. 11), it can hardly be expressed here. There being no verb expressed in the Heb., גדול שמי בגוים can only be naturally rendered 'My name is great among the Gentiles'; inasmuch further as vv. 11, 12 plainly give a reason ('For') for the disapproval expressed in v. 10<sup>b</sup>, they must describe a condition of things existing in the prophet's own present; the contrast between what is done at the time by the Jews in v. 12 with what is done elsewhere in v. 11 points to the same conclusion. Notice also the exactly similar words in v. 14, 'And my name is feared among the Gentiles,' where no one has ever thought of rendering by a future. Hence it is extremely difficult to think that v. 11 can refer to any time except the prophet's own present.

On the other hand, it is urged that the expression, 'my name,' presupposes the Divine revelation, and cannot refer to an unconscious worship. Hence Ewald, Kirkpatrick (p. 505), and others, while agreeing that the passage relates to the present, suppose the reference to be to the Jews of the Dispersion, who, scattered through the world, rendered by their offerings of prayer and praise a more acceptable service to Yahweh than the careless priests in the Temple at Jerusalem, and that thus Yahweh's name was magnified among the heathen more than in His own Temple and in the city of His choice. The contrast would then be between the faithful Jews of the Dispersion and the lax and indifferent Jews of the capital. It is some objection to this interpretation that it requires 'incense' and 'offering' to be understood in a spiritual sense, of prayer (Ps. cxli. 2; Rev. v. 8, viii. 3), and praise (Ps. l. 14; Heb. xiii. 15; 1 Pet. ii. 5), or self-dedication (Rom. xii. 1), which is not very natural where Jews are the offerers, and where there is nothing, as in the passages quoted, to suggest that the terms are used in such a sense. Perhaps also the argument founded on 'my name' lays rather too much stress upon this particular expression.

incense is offered, &c. It is difficult to see how RVm. differs from RV. (= AV.), except in the order of words ('oblation' is substituted for 'offering' on account no doubt of the proximity of 'offering'). The Heb. is, however, somewhat peculiar:

 12 among the Gentiles, saith the LORD of hosts. But ye profane it, in that ye say, The table of the LORD is polluted, and the fruit thereof, even his meat, is con-

the subst. rendered 'incense' does not occur elsewhere, and Ewald and Keil, taking it as a ptc., construe differently<sup>1</sup>, but obtain the same general sense. We., Now., Marti, however, think that 'it is offered' is a gloss on 'it is incensed (or burnt),' and omitting a ו, render, 'and a pure offering is burnt unto my name,'—the word rendered 'burnt' being the one regularly used of consuming the sacrifices on the altar (Lev. i. 9, &c.), and meaning properly made into sweet smoke (קִטֹּף).

a pure offering. Heb. minhāh, to be understood in the same sense as in v. 10. 'Pure,' as unsullied by irreverence, like the sacrifices offered in the Temple at Jerusalem (vv. 7, 12), or by an ungodly spirit in the offerers (2 Tim. ii. 22).

From Justin (c. Tryph. § 41, cf. § 117) and Irenaeus (iv. 17. 5) onwards, it has often been supposed that this passage of Malachi is prophetic of the Eucharistic offering, to which, it is also pointed out, minhāh, in the sense of a meal-offering, would be entirely appropriate. As we have seen, however, the context seems plainly to show that the reference is to offerings made in Malachi's own time; and secondly, when minhāh has been used just before (v. 10), and is used again just after (v. 13), in a continuous argument, in its wider sense of sacrifices in general (including animal sacrifices), it is not consistent with sound exegesis to understand it differently in this one verse.

12, 13. In contrast to the honour which the heathen thus render to Yahweh, the priests of Israel dishonour Him, treating His worship with disrespect and contempt.

12. in that ye say, &c. As in v. 7, not literally, but by irreverence towards Yahweh's altar and offerings.

and the fruit thereof, &c. If correct, 'fruit' (פֶּתִי, a rare word, Is. lvii. 19) will be a figure for 'offerings.' But the figure is a strange one: the Heb. construction is forced; and most probably פֶּתִי is simply an incorrect anticipation of the following נֶחֱמֶה (W. R. Smith, Now., &c.). Render then, and his food is contemptible. 'Meat' in AV. is here used in its now obsolete sense noticed on Hab. i. 16.

temptible. Ye say also, Behold, what a weariness is it! <sup>13</sup> and ye have snuffed at it, saith the LORD of hosts; and ye have brought that which was taken by violence, and the lame, and the sick; thus ye bring the offering: should I accept this of your hand? saith the LORD. But cursed <sup>14</sup> be the deceiver, which hath in his flock a male, and voweth, and sacrificeth unto the Lord a blemished thing:

puff at it. I. e. condemn it. For the figure cf. Ps. x. 5, xii. 5 (where the Heb. word is almost the same); and the note on Hag. i. 9. 'It' will refer to the 'altar,' v. 12. The passage is, however, one of the eighteen 'corrections of the scribes' (see on Hab. i. 12), and 'me' (which is found in some MSS.) is said to have been the original reading for 'it'; and perhaps Now., Marti, and others are right in adopting this. 'Snuff' is an archaism for 'sniff'; but 'puff,' or 'blow,' is the idea which the Heb. word expresses.

and ye bring that which hath been taken by violence (robbed). Treating therefore Yahweh with contempt, as though He cared so little what was offered to Him that He would even accept this. There is, however, an awkwardness in the Heb., which makes it possible that we should read (We., Now., al.) 'and ye bring the blind'; cf. v. 8.

thus ye bring the offering. The clause is much improved if, with We., we make a very slight change (את המנחה for אתו מנחה), and read, and ye bring it as an offering.

of your hand. 'Of' is here an archaism for 'from': cf. Ex. xxxvi. 3; John iv. 22 (AV.); 2 Cor. v. 1 (AV.), &c. See 'Of' in DB.

14. The prophet closes the paragraph with an indignant rebuke, addressed to the laity, who also, like the priests, failed in treating Yahweh with becoming reverence. A vow was made; and the vow was redeemed by offering a sickly or inferior animal. Naturally, the priests also were to blame for allowing such sacrifices to be presented.

and voweth. I. e. and voweth it (LXX, Now., Smith, &c.). The 'vow' was a promise to offer something to Yahweh in case some prayer or wish were granted (Gen. xxviii. 20-22; Jud. xi. 31; Ps. lxvi. 13-14). According to the 'Law of Holiness' (the older legislation embedded in Lev. xvii-xxvi), an animal offered for I am a great king, saith the LORD of hosts, and my name is terrible among the Gentiles.

2 And now, O ye priests, this commandment is for you.

2 If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, saith the LORD of hosts, then will I send the curse upon you, and I will curse your blessings: yea, I have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart. Behold, I will rebuke <sup>a</sup> the seed as a burnt-offering in payment of a vow had to be a male (Lev. xxii. 18-20), in the case of one offered similarly as a peace-offering there was no such restriction (ib. v. 21): in either case, however, the animal had to be without blemish or imperfection (vv. 19, 20, 21<sup>b</sup>, 22-24). Here, a male, the more valuable animal, was promised, but when the time for paying the vow came, an inferior or blemished animal was substituted for it.

a blemished thing. Heb. a corrupt thing,—cognate with the word rendered 'corruption' in Lev. xxii. 25.

for I am a great king. And not therefore to be treated with such disrespect.

and terrible, &c. Or, feared (v. 6), reverenced among the Gentiles; and how much more, therefore, to be reverenced among My own people!

11. 1-9. In thus acting the priests have shown themselves unworthy of their ancestry: unless they alter their ways, and treat Him with the respect that is His due, Yahweh will send His curse upon them; and they will be openly disgraced in the sight of all the people.

And now, unto you (emph.) pertaineth this commandment, O priests. The 'commandment,' or charge, is apparently the commandment to reform, implicit in vv. 2, 3: cf. v. 4<sup>a</sup>.

2. to give glory (or honour,—as i. 6, and in the Fifth Commandment) unto my name. I. e. to render it the reverence and respect which are its due.

I will send upon you the curse. As Dt. xxviii. 20, which is probably alluded to.

your blessings. As Dt. xxviii. 2,—here more particularly of the privileges and advantages bestowed by Yahweh upon the priesthood.

yea, I have cursed them already. The curse has already begun.

3. The humiliation and disgrace, which will fall upon them.

for your sake, and will spread dung upon your faces, even the dung of your <sup>a</sup> sacrifices; and ye shall be taken away <sup>b</sup> with it. And ye shall know that I have sent this command- 4

I will rebuke your seed <sup>1</sup>. I. e. prevent your seed from springing up or coming to maturity, make your field unfruitful. But as the priests did not practise agriculture, such a threat would not have any special significance for them. Hence nearly all moderns, including even Keil, changing merely the vowel-points, read, with LXX, Aq., Vulg., as RVm. rebuke your arm, incapacitate you for performing your duties in the sanctuary. But it is quite possible that we should make a further correction, and read (with We., Now., Marti) גָּרַע for גָּרַע: behold, I will hew off your arm,—a forcible figure for depriving them entirely of their power, their position, and their authority. Cf. especially 1 S. ii. 31, where the same figure (render 'hew' for 'cut') is used to express the humiliation about to come upon Eli's house.

and will spread offal upon your faces. A still greater insult and indignity. The 'offal' meant is that which was removed from the animals offered in sacrifice, and either thrown away, or (in the case of the sin-offering) burnt: Ex. xxix. 14; Lev. iv. 11, xvi. 27 (where the Heb. word is the same).

with it. This is possible (Jos. xiii. 22, Lam. iii. 41, Heb.), though RVm. unto it is the more obvious rendering. The priests, who had dishonoured Yahweh's offerings, themselves now bespattered with the offal of the sacrifices, will be taken off ignominiously to the place where it is thrown away as refuse.

4. When this disgrace falls upon them, they will know (i. e. realize) that Yahweh had sent this charge (v. 1) unto them, in order that His ancient covenant with the tribe of Levi might stand fast. 'Be,' it seems, must here have the force of continue or be maintained. For the 'covenant' with Levi, i. e. the conditions of holiness, separation to Yahweh, and faithfulness in the discharge of their duties, under which the tribe of Levi possessed the priesthood, cf. Dt. xxxiii. 9 (in the 'Blessing' attributed to Moses), Jer. xxxiii. 21.

<sup>1</sup> Without 'for your sake': the ל in לָכֶם is the ל of reference (lit. 'rebuke the seed for you'), often used idiomatically in such phrases: see e. g. ii. 12, iii. 11 (second and third clauses), Lev. xxvi. 5 (lit. 'the threshing shall reach for you'), 26 ('when I break for you'), 1 K. xiv. 10 (lit. 'cut off for Jeroboam'), al. (Lex. 512<sup>b</sup>).

 life and peace; and I gave them to him that he might fear, and he feared me, and stood in awe of my name.
 6 The law of truth was in his mouth, and unrighteousness

The expressions 'Levi,' here and v. 8, and 'sons of Levi' (iii. 3), are noticeable. In the Pentateuch the term 'Levite' or 'sons of Levi' is used in two senses,—reflecting, as can hardly be doubted, two different stages in the history of the priesthood. In Deuteronomy it is applied to all members of the tribe without distinction; and every 'Levite,' i.e. every member of the tribe, possesses de jure priestly rights, and may exercise them, if he comes to reside at the central sanctuary (Dt. xviii. 6 f.; see further the writer's Commentary on Deut. pp. 213 ff., 219 f.; or W.R. Smith, OTJC.<sup>2</sup> pp. 358 ff., 383 f.). In P the priesthood is rigidly limited to the descendants of Aaron; and the term 'Levite' is applied to inferior members of the tribe, who are assigned various subordinate duties in connexion with the sanctuary (Nu. iii-iv), but are strictly forbidden to intrude upon the office of priest (Nu. iv. 20, xvi. 7<sup>b</sup>-11, 40). Thus in Deuteronomy the distinctive title of the priests is 'the priests the Levites' (or 'the sons of Levi'), i.e. the Levitical priests (xvii. 9, 18, xviii. 1, xxi. 5, xxiv. 8, xxvii. 9, xxxi. 9): in P it is 'the sons of Aaron' (Lev. i. 5, and often). Malachi thus follows, here, v. 8 and iii. 3, the Deuteronomic phraseology.

5. The conditions of the covenant. The Heb. is expressed obscurely. According to the Massoretic interpunction, it reads, 'My covenant was with him, life and peace: and I gave them to him (as) fear, and he feared me': but this yields no satisfactory sense: RV. 'that he might fear' is also too free. It is better to render: 'My covenant was with him: life and peace, and I gave them (= which I gave) unto him, [and] fear and he feared me,' &c.: the verse then states the conditions of the covenant, on the one side life and peace (i.e., in a broad sense, welfare and prosperity), promised by Yahweh to Levi; on the other side fear, or reverence, which in the past, according to Malachi's representation, the priests had duly rendered Him. For 'life' see Dt. xxx. 15; for 'peace' cf. the 'covenant of peace' of Ez. xxxiv. 25, xxxvii. 26, Is. liv. 10, in Nu. xxv. 12 also (P) given to Phineas.

6. How this fear of God displayed itself in the faithful discharge of priestly duties.

The law of truth, &c. Rather, The direction (or teaching) of truth was in his mouth. 'Tōrāh' was oral direction given was not found in his lips: he walked with me in peace and uprightness, and did turn many away from iniquity. For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they 7 should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the messenger of the LORD of hosts. But ye are turned aside out of the 8 way; ye have caused many to stumble in the law; ye have by the priests to the laity on matters of moral and ceremonial duty (see on Hab. i. 4, Hag. ii. 11): this 'direction,' Malachi says, was formerly given correctly and faithfully by the priests. Observe, in accordance with the proper oral character of 'tôrâh,' how elsewhere also, even in some cases in a non-technical sense, it is referred to as being in the 'mouth' (v. 7, Job xxii. 22, Ps. cxix. 72), or 'on the tongue' (Prov. xxxi. 26).

unrighteousness. I.e., here, 'direction' given with such laxity as to dishonour Yahweh (cf. on Zeph. iii. 4), or perverted by bribery (Mic. iii. 11; cf. also Jer. viii. 8).

he walked with me (Gen. v. 22) in peace and uprightness: i.e. in a state of contentment, not disturbed by jealousies, or unsatisfied ambitions, and of uprightness in the discharge of the duties of his office.

For the lips of a priest keep knowledge,—the knowledge viz. of the law (Jer. viii. 8), and in particular of its ceremonial observances.

and men seek direction (v. 6) at his mouth, because he is Yahweh's messenger: it is Yahweh's tôrâh which he administers. 'Messenger' is otherwise used of the priest only in Eccl. v. 6: cf. Hag. i. 13 (of the prophet). Compare the eulogy of the priestly tribe in Dt. xxxiii. 8-11, especially vv. 9, 10: 'They keep thy saying, and observe thy covenant: they teach (lit. 'direct') Jacob thy judgements, and Israel thy "direction."'

But ye (emph.) have turned aside out of the way (Ex. xxxii. 8, Jud. ii. 17),—the way described in vv. 6, 7, in which you ought to have walked.

ye have made many to stumble by direction (not 'in the law'). 'Unrighteousness' (v. 6) was on your lips, and you have caused many to err by giving them false 'direction': the consequence is, you have corrupted, i.e. ruined, destroyed, the covenant with Levi: the 'life and peace' on the one hand, and the 'fear' on the other (v. 6), are all at an end. Cf. Neh. xiii.

corrupted the covenant of Levi, saith the LORD of hosts.

9 Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, according as ye have not kept my ways, but have had respect of persons in the law.

10 Have we not all one father? hath not one God created

29, where the priests who had married foreign wives are described as having 'defiled the priesthood, and the covenant of the priesthood and of the Levites.'

have I also. The 'also' (וְאִנִּי) of 'correspondence' (Ps. lii. 5; Hos. iv. 6: Lex. p. 169<sup>b</sup>): I also, on my part, will assert myself, and visit you with condign retribution. 'Have made' is here equivalent to 'will assuredly make,'—the action, though its accomplishment is still future, being so fully resolved upon that it is spoken of as already done: so Gen. xv. 18, Jud. xv. 3 Heb., Is. xliii. 14 al.

base: i.e. low, abased, in position, not in character, as often in Old English: cf. Ez. xvii. 14, xxix. 14; 2 Cor. x. 1 AV.

according as ye do not keep my ways, but respect persons (i.e. show partiality) in (giving) direction. The priests, it seems, were open to bribery (Mic. iii. 11 'her priests direct for hire'); and, it may be supposed, permitted to one what they refused to another, or exacted from some lower fees, or less costly sacrifices than they exacted from others: legal decisions also, such as could easily be vitiated by unjust interest or influence, appear to have been included in the tôrâh (Dt. xvii. 8-12; Ez. xlv. 24).

respect persons. The Heb. expression is the same as in i. 8; but it is used here in a bad sense, of favouring unjustly, as Ps. lxxxii. 2, Dt. x. 17. However, the omission of a letter yields an attractive emendation, nor respect me, which forms a good parallel to the preceding clause.

10-16. Malachi here turns to rebuke his contemporaries for a great social wrong, to which they were addicted at the time, viz. the divorce of their native wives (vv. 10, 13-16), for the sake, apparently (vv. 10 end., 11-12), at least in some cases, of contracting marriages with foreign women (cf. Ezr. ix-x; Neh. xiii. 23-29), a fashion which the prophet also censures at the same time. The practice of divorce he declares to be an offence against the love and faithfulness which as children of one Father they all owe to one another, an unnatural cruelty towards those who have been long bound to them by the ties of affection, and a challenge to the Divine judgement.

10. Yahweh is Israel's father (Dt. xxxii. 18; Is. lxiii. 16): we are all, therefore, brothers one of another: ought we not then us? why do we deal treacherously every man against his brother, profaning the covenant of our fathers? Judah<sup>11</sup> hath dealt treacherously, and an abomination is committed in Israel and in Jerusalem; for Judah hath profaned the<sup>a</sup> holiness of the LORD which he loveth, and hath married the daughter of a strange god. The LORD will cut off to<sup>12</sup> to treat one another with brotherly regard, and not be faithless to the 'covenant,' by which (cf. Ex. xix. 5 f.) Yahweh separated us from the heathen, and made us a people peculiar to Himself?

deal treacherously. Or, faithlessly. The word is used also elsewhere of faithlessness to the marriage bond, vv. 14, 15, 16, Ex. xxi. 8, Jer. iii. 20<sup>a</sup>.

profaning the covenant of our fathers. Viz. by marrying foreign wives, and thereby, in heedless disregard of the covenant by which Israel was separated from the heathen, imperilling its distinctive nationality (cf. the prohibition of such marriages, Ex. xxxiv. 16, Dt. vii. 3 f.).

11. Judah. The entire people is spoken of as implicated in the wrong. The words 'in Israel and' should doubtless be omitted; for 'Israel' is here out of place: a scribe probably wrote inadvertently 'in Israel' as a natural parallel to 'Judah,' then discovering his error he wrote 'in Jerusalem' as well, and the two remained in the text together.

hath dealt faithlessly. Here the expression is used not of faithlessness to the marriage-tie, but of faithlessness to Yahweh in discarding Him, at least constructively (viz. by marrying foreign women), for other gods: cf. Jer. iii. 7, 8, 20<sup>b</sup>, v. 11.

an abomination is wrought: on account of the heathen practices and worships likely to be involved: cf. Dt. xiii. 14, xvii. 4 (the same phrase); Ezr. ix. 14.

Yahweh's holiness (or holy thing): i. e. Israel itself, as holy to Yahweh. Cf. Jer. ii. 3; also Ex. xix. 6, Dt. vii. 6, xiv. 2, &c. Or (marg.), Yahweh's sanctuary (1 K. viii. 10, 2 Chr. xxix. 5 Heb.), which is also profaned by the people's sins (Ez. v. 11, Lev. xx. 3, cf. xxvi. 2).

the daughter of a foreign god. I. e. a foreign woman, belonging to another religion. The expression suggests pointedly the motive of the rebuke. For the figure cf. Dt. xxxii. 19, where the Israelites are called the sons and daughters of Yahweh; and Nu. xxi. 29 (the Moabites, sons and daughters of Chemosh). 'Strange' (EVV.), from the Lat. extraneus, is used here in the the man that doeth this him that waketh and him that answereth, out of the tents of Jacob, and him that offereth now obsolete sense, which was formerly very common, of foreign cf. the expressions 'strange women,' 'strange wives,' 1 K. xi. 1, Ezr. x. 2, 10, &c., Neh. xiii. 26, 27; 'strange gods,' Gen. xxxv. 2, 4 AV. (RV. 'alien'), Dt. xxxii. 12, Ps. lxxxii. 9<sup>b</sup> al.; 'a strange land,' Ps. cxxxvii. 4. So the Homilies (cited by Aldis Wright) speak of 'a certain strange philosopher,' meaning, not an eccentric one, but a foreign one. But, as now understood, 'strange' so little suggests what is intended that it is a pity that 'foreign' has not been regularly substituted for it in RV.<sup>1</sup>

12. May the man who does this be left with none in any way to stand by or assist him!

him that waketh and him that answereth. If correct, this will be (in the Heb.) an alliterative proverbial expression (like 'him that is shut up, and him that is left at large in Israel,' 1 K. xxi. 21), meaning every one (i. e., here, every one belonging to him, every member of his family, Is. xiv. 22), and generally supposed, after Gesenius, to be derived from the challenge and reply given by sentries or watchmen as they went their rounds in the night. Ges. quotes a rather similar expression, used by an Arabic writer, 'There was not in the city a caller or answerer,' i. e. any one alive. Hitz. and Keil, however, render him that is awake and answereth (both words referring to the same person), i. e. any one alive, objecting to Ges.'s explanation that that would require 'him that calleth and him that answereth.' We., Now. and Smith, read, after LXX (ἐως), וַי for ו, 'witness and answerer' (viz. in a court of law: see Job xiii. 22): may he be <sup>1</sup> 'Stranger' also is often used similarly in the now obsolete sense of 'foreigner,' as Lev. xxii. 25 AV. (RV. 'foreigner'), 1 K. viii. 41, Neh. ix. 2, xiii. 30, Ez. xlv. 7, 9 AV. (RV. 'aliens'), Ps. cxliv. 7, 11. In fact 'stranger' is used in EVV. in three distinct senses, corresponding to three distinct Heb. words: (1) = outsider (Heb. sār), as 'belonging to another family, Dt. xxv. 5, or nation, Is. i. 7 and often; of a non-Levite, Nu. xviii. 4, a non-priest, Nu. xvi. 40; (2) = foreigner (Heb. nokri, and cognates), as in Lev. xxii. 25, &c., just cited; (3) = resident alien (Heb. gēr, 'sojourner'), see on Zech. vii. 10. And 'strange' occurs similarly in senses corresponding to the first two of these heads: thus for (1) see Dt. xxxii. 16, Ps. xlv. 20, lxxxii. 9<sup>a</sup> (= strange to the theocracy); Lev. x. 1 (= strange to the law); and for (2) the passages cited above in the text.

And this <sup>a</sup> again ye <sup>13</sup> do: ye cover the altar of the LORD with tears, with weeping, and with sighing, insomuch that he regardeth not the offering any more, neither receiveth it with good will at your hand. Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the <sup>14</sup> LORD hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously, though she is thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant.

ye cover, &c. RV. means, Ye cover Yahweh's altar with the tears of the divorced wives, who complain there to Yahweh of their wrongs, so that the gifts offered upon it are no more acceptable in His sight. But this interpretation of either 'ye do' or 'ye cover' is not very natural; and We., Now., Smith, Marti may be right in rendering, 'Ye cover the altar with tears, because (see Is. l. 2 Heb.) he regardeth not,' &c., supposing some calamity (cf. iii. 11) to have overtaken the nation, which the people regarded as a sign that Yahweh was displeased with them, and would not accept their offerings; they accordingly pressed round the altar, and implored there, even with tears, the return of His favour.

with good will. Or, with acceptance. The Heb. word (נָסַח) is the one rendered in Lev. i. 3, xix. 5, and elsewhere, that he (ye) may be accepted (lit. 'for his (your) acceptance'). Cf. on i. 8, 10.

14. The people are supposed to ask why Yahweh does not accept their offerings: the prophet replies, Because of their unfaithfulness to the marriage-tie.

<sup>a</sup> Or, And not one hath done so who had a residue of the spirit. Or what? is there one that seeketh a godly seed?

17. Or, perhaps (Now., Marti), the wife belonging to the covenant between Israel and its God, in which thou sharest, as opposed to the 'daughter of a foreign god,' v. 11.

15<sup>a</sup>. A difficult and certainly corrupt passage. Four views of it may be noticed: (1) RV. (substantially = AV.) means: Did not he (God) make but one (Adam), although He had the residue of the spirit (of life: Gen. vi. 17), (and could therefore have made as many as He pleased). Why then did He make but one? Because He sought a godly seed (which could only be secured by the union of a single man with a single woman). But this interpretation is very forced.

(2) RVm. means: Not one hath ever done this (viz. faithlessly divorced his wife); who had a vestige (cf. on Zeph. i. 4) of the spirit (of God, Ps. cxliii. 10,—though there is no article here in the Heb.). Or is there any one seeking godly children (and so withheld by this from divorcing his wife)?

(3) Hitzig and Keil render: 'And not one hath done so, who had a vestige of reason ('spirit,' as Job xxxii. 8, but here of the moral sense). And what (did) the one (do)? He was seeking a seed of God.' 'And what did the one do?' is supposed to be an objection raised by the Jews: But what, they ask, did 'the' (well-known) 'one,' Abraham, do, when he sent away Hagar? The prophet replies, He was (not gratifying himself, as you are, but) seeking the promised seed. But 'the one' is a strange expression by which to denote Abraham (Is. li. 2, Ez. xxxiii. 24 are different); nor was Hagar Abraham's 'wife.'

(4) We., emending slightly the text, renders (so Now.): 'Hath not (הא לא) One (God: cf. v. 10) made and left over (וַיַּשְׁאֵר for וַיַּשָּׂא), i. e. preserved (1 S. xiv. 36, xxv. 22), to us (לָנוּ for לוֹ), the spirit (of life: Gen. vi. 17; Is. xlii. 5)? And what doth the One seek? a seed of God (i. e. children, the gift of God, Ps. cxxvii. 3).' The passage then gives two reasons against divorce: (1) we are all members of God's family, and should treat one another accordingly: (2) when our wives give us children, we have obtained as much as Yahweh designs, or we are entitled to expect; we are not entitled to discard our wives afterwards, because they grow old. This interpretation yields an excellent sense, and is attractive, though to 'leave over' (viz. from destruction: 1 S. ii. 33) is not a natural expression to use in the present connexion for to 'preserve.'

seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth. For <sup>a</sup> I 16 hate putting away, saith the LORD, the God of Israel, and him that covereth his garment with violence, saith the LORD of hosts: therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously.

Ye have wearied the LORD with your words. Yet ye

15<sup>b</sup>. to your spirit: the Heb. can mean only 'in your spirit,' i.e. in your mind. Reading ל for ג we could render for your spirit (i.e. for your life),—a variation of the more common 'take heed to yourselves' (lit. for your soul), Dt. iv. 15 al. But the same error is hardly likely to have happened twice (v. 16 end).

and let, &c. The Heb. is, 'And against the wife of thy youth let him not (or let none) deal faithlessly.' This is obviously wrong. We must either, with Pesh., AV., RV., read 'his' for 'thy' (נָשִׁיתוֹ for נְשִׁיתִי), or, with several Heb. MSS., LXX, Targ., Vulg., read 'deal not' for 'let none deal' (יִנָּהֵג for יִנָּהֵג). The latter is more pointed, and preferable.

16. Divorce is hateful to Yahweh. Dt. xxiv. 1-4 regulates divorce, but does not prohibit it. An ambiguous expression in Dt. xxiv. 1 (RV. 'some unseemly thing'; see the writer's note ad loc.) may have contributed to the laxity which afterwards prevailed (cf. Mt. xix. 3 'for every cause'). Malachi's words are an anticipation of the higher teaching of Mt. v. 32, xix. 6, 8.

I hate. The Heb., as RVm. states, is 'he hateth'; but the first person is required by the context, so that either אֲנִי אֶשְׂנֵא or אֲנִי שְׂנֵאתִי must be read for שְׂנֵאתִי. 'Putting away,' as Dt. xxiv. 1.

that covereth his garment with violence: apparently a fig. expression for, covereth himself with violence (viz. in ill-treating his wife). In the Kor'ān ii. 183 it is said, 'You are permitted to approach your wives in the night of the fast. They are your garment, and you are theirs'; and some commentators accordingly take 'garment' here as a figure for 'wife.' But it is doubtful whether 'his garment,' standing alone, without any explanation (as in the Kor'ān passage), could have this sense.

to your spirit. Read in, as before; and then 'deal not faithlessly.'

ii. 17—iii. 6. There was a class among Malachi's contemporaries who were not irreligious (cf. iii. 14<sup>b</sup>), and are not to be identified with the godless of iii. 15, 18, but who were deficient in spirituality, and were tempted consequently by the troubles and social anomalies which they saw about them to question God's justice, and to doubt whether He would ever interpose, to distinguish between the evil and the good. To such the prophet replies that the day is at hand when Yahweh will suddenly appear in His Temple to separate between the righteous and the wicked, and to purify His ungodly nation, priests and laity alike, in the furnace of judgement.

17. wearied. A strong word: properly made to toil, fig. for, been a burden and trouble to me; cf. Is. xliii. 23<sup>b</sup>, 24<sup>b</sup> (where the parallel clause has made to serve). Not the word used in Is. vii. 13.

or where? &c. There is no God of judgement; or else He would have interposed long ago.

iii. 1. The judgement which has been called in question will come: Yahweh Himself will suddenly appear in His temple, and execute it.

Behold, I am sending: the participle, as often in the prophets, especially after 'behold,' of the future, conceived and pictured as imminent. The judgement described by the prophet is pictured by him as falling upon the present generation; cf. on iv. 1, 5; Nah. ii. 2; Hag. ii. 21; Zech. iii. 8. For other examples (in the Heb.), see Hab. i. 6; Zeph. iii. 19; Zech. ii. 8, 9 [Heb. 13, 14], iii. 9, viii. 7, xi. 6, 16, xii. 2, xiv. 1; Mal. ii. 3, iii. 1 end.

my messenger: an ideal figure, who will clear the way before Yahweh,—fig. for, prepare men to receive Him, like the courier who precedes an earthly monarch to announce his approach. Cf. iv. 5.

whom ye seek: alluding to the wish to see Him appear, implied in the words 'or where,' &c., at the end of ii. 17.

suddenly. A graphic and significant addition, at a moment when you do not expect it. Cf. in the N. T. Mt. xxiv. 42, 44.

the messenger of the covenant: a synonym of 'the Lord' (יהוה),—notice 'whom ye desire,' parallel to 'whom ye seek,'—i. e. Yahweh, not in Himself, however, but in a representative form (just as 'Yahweh's angel' in the historical books is Yahweh saith the LORD of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, and he shall in a representative form), who may embody and represent the claims of the covenant upon Israel. The 'and' connects not different ideas, but different expressions of the same idea (explained in RVm. by 'even'), as e. g. Is. v. 16, xlv. 1, 2<sup>b</sup>, xlix. 14.

The first half of the verse is cited in Mt. xi. 10 = Luke vii. 27 by our Lord, and in Mk. i. 2 by the Evangelist (cf. Luke i. 76 in the Benedictus), and applied to John the Baptist, the forerunner of Christ, who prepared men for Him by preaching repentance and proclaiming the advent of the kingdom of God (Mt. iii. 1-12). Only we must remember, as in some other cases (Zech. ix. 9, for instance), that, though one detail in the prophecy was thus fulfilled, the entire picture, as drawn by the prophet, was not fulfilled; for Christ, when He came to the Temple, initiated no purifying judgement upon the priesthood, nor was His advent followed by any such moral change as made Judah's offerings more acceptable to God than they had been before. Malachi, moreover, clearly pictures a judgement which is to take place shortly, so as to satisfy the doubters of his own day. The prophets project ideals, which are the pictorial embodiments of great moral and spiritual truths, but which are often not fulfilled in the manner or at the time indicated by the terms which the prophets use. Cf. F. H. Woods, The Hope of Israel (1896), chaps. iv, x.

2. The 'day' of Yahweh's appearing will be one of judgement and purification, before which nothing but what is noblest and purest can endure. Cf. Am. v. 18 f.; and on Zeph. i. 7.

fullers' soap: cleansing garments thoroughly from all impurities. By 'soap' is meant no doubt 'lye' (Job ix. 30 RVm.), i. e. water mixed with the burnt ashes of certain plants containing alkali, which was used formerly for washing purposes. LXX πόα (as Jer. ii. 22), with reference, as Jerome explains, to such plants.

3. sit: a graphic, pictorial touch: cf. 'stand' in Mic. v. 4.

as a refiner and purifier of silver. The passage is well illustrated by J. Napier, The Ancient Workers and Artificers in Metal, 1856, p. 24, cited in Smith, DB. svv. 'MINES' and 'LEAD.' In the 'cupelling' process, by which silver is separated from such impurities as iron, copper, or tin (Ez. xxii. 20), the alloy is mixed with lead, placed in a 'cupel,' or small crucible made of bone ash, and then raised to a full red heat in a furnace. When the alloy is melted, air is blown upon it: this causes the lead and other baser metals to oxidize; the oxides form at first a kind of orange-red scum on the surface of the molten alloy; but soon, 'as the heat is increased, the colour of the fused metals becomes brighter. . . . At this stage the refiner watches the operation, either standing or sitting, with the greatest earnestness, until the orange colour disappears, and the metal has the appearance of a highly polished mirror, reflecting every object around it; even the refiner, as he looks upon it, may see himself as in a looking-glass; and thus he can form a very correct idea respecting the purity of the metal.'

purge. The word (רָפָּי), meaning properly, it seems, to strain, which is used of 'purifying' or 'refining' silver in Ps. xii. 7, 1 Chr. xxix. 4, and gold in Job xxviii. 1, 1 Chr. xxviii. 18.

and they shall be unto Yahweh offerers of offerings in righteousness. The Hebrew expresses a continuing condition. For 'offerings,' here and v. 4 (Heb. minhāh), see on i. 10.

in righteousness: i. e. in holiness of life (Luke i. 75), and as the expression of a righteous spirit. Cf. 'sacrifices of righteousness,' Dt. xxxiii. 19, Ps. iv. 5, li. 19, in the same sense.

4. Then Judah's offerings will be again acceptable to Yahweh (contrast i. 10, 13 f., ii. 13), as in the golden days of old. The past is idealized, as in ii. 5, 6 (cf. Hos. ii. 15; Jer. ii. 2): 'days of old' is an indefinite expression, which may refer either to the Mosaic age (Is. lxiii. 9, 11), or to the days of David and Solomon (Am. ix. 11); cf. for the general thought Is. i. 26.

5. The judgement will not stop at the corrupt priesthood; it will pass on and embrace sinners among the people generally.

to judgement: the answer to the challenge of ii. 17 end.

a swift witness: a witness prompt not only in giving evidence, but also, being at the same time judge, in executing the sentence.

sorcerers: Ex. xxii. 18 (fem.); Dt. xviii. 10. In proof of sorcery prevailing also after the Exile Keil quotes Jos. Ant. xx. 8. 6, BJ. ii. 13. 5, 6 (under Felix); Acts viii. 9, xiii. 6.

swearers ; and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the LORD of hosts. For I the LORD change not ; there- 6 fore ye, O sons of Jacob, are not consumed.

From the days of your fathers ye have turned aside 7 from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the LORD of hosts. But ye say, Wherein shall we return ? Will a man 8 rob God ? yet ye rob me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee ? In tithes and <sup>a</sup> offerings. Ye are cursed 9 that oppress (or defraud) the hireling : Dt. xxiv. 14. For the rend. 'defraud,' which is the kind of oppression meant, see 1 S. xii. 3, 4 ; Lev. xix. 13 (AV.) ; Hos. xii. 7 (RVm.) ; and AVm. here.

the stranger : i. e. the resident foreigner (see on Zech. vii. 10) : Ex. xxii. 21 f. ; Dt. xxiv. 17 ('the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow,' as types of the needy and unprotected, also often besides in Dt., as x. 18, xiv. 29, xvi. 11, 14, xxiv. 19, 20, 21). For 'turn aside,' &c., cf. Is. x. 1, xxix. 21 ; Am. v. 12.

6. For, &c. The verse must give the reason for vv. 2-5 in general : Yahweh does not destroy, but only purifies Israel, because, in His purposes towards His people, He is unchangeable, and will not utterly consume them (Jer. xxx. 11).

7-12. Malachi now charges the people with neglecting to pay tithes and other dues. Let these be paid ; and the drought and other visitations from which the people are suffering will cease, and the land will be abundantly blessed.

7. From the days, &c. The burden of the prophecies of Jeremiah and Ezekiel : see e. g. Jer. vii. 25 f., xxv. 3-7 ; Ez. xx. 5-26.

Return unto me, &c. As Zech. i. 3.

But ye say, &c. Affecting not to know in what respect there is any occasion to 'return.'

8. Will a man (emph.) rob God, that ye rob me ? You are doing what it is incredible that any man would do.

tithes. The payment of tithe is prescribed in both Dt. (xii. 17 f., xiv. 22-29), and the Priests' Code (Nu. xviii. 21-32 ; Lev.

xxvii. 30-33). The provisions in the two Codes differ remarkably. In Dt. the tithe is levied on vegetable produce alone; and it is appropriated in two years out of three to sacred feasts partaken in by the offerer and his household at the central sanctuary (Dt. xiv. 22-27), in the third year it is to be stored up in the offerer's own city for the relief of the poor (Dt. xiv. 28, 29, xxvi. 12), in both cases the members of the priestly tribe sharing with others in the Israelite's benevolence: in P the tithe is levied on cattle (Lev. xxvii. 32 f.) as well as on vegetable produce, and it is appropriated entirely to the priestly tribe, being paid in the first instance to the 'Levites,' who in their turn pay a tenth of what they receive to the priests. These differences can only be explained by the supposition that the two sets of provisions reflect the usage of different periods of the history; but a further discussion of the subject is not called for here (see DB. s. v. 'TITHE'; or the writer's Deuteronomy, pp. 169 ff.). Malachi (v. 10) presupposes the regulations of P.

offering. Heb. terûmāh, quite a different word from the one rendered 'offering' in i. 10, 11, 13, ii. 12, 13, iii. 3, 4, and denoting an entirely different class of things. Terûmāh (from הָרִים 'to lift or take off') denotes properly what is 'taken off' from a larger mass, and so separated from it for sacred purposes (LXX often ἀφαίρεμα): it is used in particular (1) of gifts taken from the produce of the soil (as tithe, firstfruits, and firstlings), sometimes seemingly including tithes, and sometimes mentioned independently, as Dt. xii. 6, 11, 17 ('tithe and terûmāh,' as here); Nu. xv. 19-21, xviii. 11 (see vv. 12 f.), 24; Ez. xlv. 30; Neh. x. 37, 39, xii. 44: (2) of contributions of money, spoil, &c., offered for sacred purposes, as Ex. xxv. 2, 3, xxx. 13-15; Nu. xxxi. 29, 41; Ezr. viii. 25 (of donations made at the erection of the Second Temple); and in Ezek. of the land reserved for the priests and Levites (Ez. xlv. 1, 6, 7, &c.): (3) in connexion with sacrifices, only of portions 'taken off' the rest, and forming the priest's due, especially of the 'heave'-thigh (Lev. vii. 32, 34 al.). Here it is used, pretty clearly, in the first of these applications. The term is a distinctive one; but unfortunately the rendering in RV. is not uniform: in the Pent., Ezr., Neh., Ez. xx. 40, and here, it is 'heave-offering' (in accordance with a mistaken idea that the term implies a rite of elevation) or 'offering'; in 2 Chr. and other passages in Ezek. it is 'oblation.' See further DB. s. v. 'OFFERING,' 5<sup>1</sup>.

Bring ye the whole tithe into the storehouse, that there <sup>10</sup> may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the LORD of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the <sup>11</sup> devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the LORD of hosts.

and yet me (emph.) are ye robbing, ye whole nation: undeterred by the curse.

10-12. If, however, the tithe is paid regularly in full, prosperity will return.

10. the whole tithe. From the emphasis laid upon the 'whole' tithe, it is evident that a part must often have been withheld.

the storehouse. Or, treasury: a chamber in the Temple Court, into which the tithe and terûmāh were paid: see Neh. x. 38, xii. 44, xiii. 5, 12, 13. The payment of the whole tithe into the Temple treasuries for the priests and Levites is in accordance with the regulations of P (Nu. xviii. 21-32); cf. on v. 8.

meat. I. e. food (Hab. i. 16), the meaning being provision for the maintenance of the priests and Levites: cf. Neh. xii. 37-39.

prove me, I pray you, herewith: and see whether, if you return to me, I shall not return to you (v. 7).

if I will not open for you (Dt. xxviii. 12) the windows of heaven (Gen. vii. 11, viii. 2; cf. 2 K. vii. 2, 19): that they may pour down an abundant rain.

11. rebuke for you the devourer. Not 'for your sakes': the dative is the dat. of reference, exactly as in the two following clauses (where it is paraphrased by 'you'): cf. the footnote on p. 399.

term, and to put a mark ('n or t.) against them on the margin of his Revised Version; he will then perceive for himself how special and distinctive the use of the term is. (Minhāh, and ḥorbān; are also often rendered in EVV. 'oblation' or 'offering,' and should be marked similarly, for distinction from each other and from terûmāh.)

- 12 And all nations shall call you happy : for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the LORD of hosts.
- 13 Your words have been stout against me, saith the LORD.
- 14 Yet ye say, Wherein have we spoken against thee? Ye have said, It is vain to serve God : and what profit is it that we have kept his charge, and that we have walked
- 15 <sup>a</sup> mournfully before the LORD of hosts? And now we call

a delightsome land. Cf. Is. lxii. 4 (see RVm. there).

iii. 13—iv. 3. Another paragraph, addressed apparently to the same class of impatient murmurers as ii. 17—iii. 6. These complained that their religious observances brought them no advantage; it was the wicked who prospered : the prophet replies that the day is coming when the distinction between the evil and the good will be made manifest : the workers of wickedness will be exterminated, and the righteous will triumph over their fall.

13. are stout (lit. 'strong,' 'hard') against me. The prophet censures the spiritual tone and attitude adopted by these murmurers. Cf. the reproach in ii. 17.

kept his charge. In the more general sense of the expression, of religious duties in general (Gen. xxvi. 5 ; Dt. xi. 1 ; 1 K. ii. 3), not specifically of ritual observances, as Zech. iii. 7 ; Lev. viii. 35 ; Nu. iii. 7, &c.

walked mournfully : cf. Ps. xxxviii. 6, xlii. 9. The meaning is, with outward marks of mourning ; and the marg., 'in mourning apparel,' is added to indicate this. קר does not denote a state of mind (sorrowing or grieving), but (meaning properly to be dirty) has reference to the squalid person and attire of a mourner in the East (2 S. xix. 24 ; Est. iv. 1 : cf. sackcloth and ashes as a mark of humiliation and contrition, Jon. iii. 6, Dan. ix. 3, 1 Macc. iii. 47). The class of persons referred to are not the godless : they kept up the forms of religion, but were deficient in spirituality ; hence they were impatient, and complained that, when they humbled themselves, and assumed the garb of mourners, on account of their sense of God's anger (as shown by the disasters alluded to in v. 11), their humiliation passed unheeded, and brought their country no relief.

the proud happy ; yea, they that work wickedness are built up ; yea, they tempt God, and are delivered. Then they that feared the LORD spake one with another : and the LORD hearkened, and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before him, for them that feared the LORD, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the LORD of hosts, in the day <sup>a</sup> that I <sup>b</sup> do other verbs implying humiliation (1 K. xxii. 29, 2 K. xxii. 19), the prep. (עַל, not עַל־) expressing not locality, but causation.

15. Now, therefore, we (emph.), &c.: as their religious observances bring them no advantage, they pronounce the godless happy.

the proud: i. e., probably, the lax and worldly Israelites, who, prosperous themselves, looked down with cold and haughty indifference upon their poorer brethren, took advantage of them (v. 5<sup>b</sup>), and treated the conscientious servants of Yahweh with disdain. Cf. in a Psalm dating from the same period, or a little later, Ps. cxix. 21, 51, 69, 78, 85, 122 (where the 'proud' are spoken of as in various ways vexing the faithful Israelites).

yea, they tempt God, &c.: i. e. they challenge God's judgment by their wickedness, and yet it comes not upon them. 'Tempt' is the word rendered 'prove' in v. 10 ; here in a bad sense, of proving in a spirit of scepticism and disbelief, i. e. to put to the proof ; so Ps. xcv. 9<sup>b</sup>.

16. Then—when they heard these arguments of the sceptics (vv. 14 f.)—the pious God-fearing Israelites discoursed together, doubtless reassuring each other with thoughts of faith and trust in God.

and Yahweh hearkened, &c. Yahweh heard what His righteous servants thus said, and resolved to reward them for their fidelity. This resolution is expressed by a figure derived from the custom of the Persian monarchs to have the names of public benefactors inscribed in a book in order that in due time they might receive a suitable reward. See Est. vi. 1 (where 'book of record(s)' is in the Heb. the same as book of remembrance here) ; and cf. Hdt. iii. 140, v. 11, viii. 85.

thought upon: or, regarded (Is. xiii. 17, xxxiii. 8).

17. The destined reward : they will be Yahweh's own possession, and under His fatherly protection, in the day upon which He appears to judgement.

make, even a peculiar treasure; and I will spare them, as 18 a man spareth his own son that serveth him. Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that 4 serveth him not. <sup>a</sup> For, behold, the day cometh, it burneth as a furnace; and all the proud, and all that work wickedness, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall

in the day on which I do (or act): עָשָׂה ('do') used absolutely, as Ps. xxii. 31, xxxvii. 5<sup>b</sup>, lii. 9; Is. xlv. 23, xlviii. 11 (there is no 'it' in these passages in the Heb.); Jer. xiv. 7 ('work'). 'That I do make' (RV.), though quite possible grammatically (Ps. cxviii. 24), is less probable. The recurrence of these words (alone) in iv. 3 is against marg. <sup>a</sup> (p. 325).

a peculiar treasure. In the Heb. one word, the one (עֲצָמָה) applied to Israel in Ex. xix. 5; and repeated thence (with 'people' added) in Dt. vii. 6, xiv. 2, xxvi. 18, Ps. cxxxv. 4 (cf. 1 Pet. ii. 9): see also, in illustration of the proper sense of the word, Eccl. ii. 8. The high privilege, which Israel as a nation had forfeited, of being Yahweh's segullāh, or special possession, is here transferred to the faithful minority of true and loyal worshippers. 'Peculiar' is used in the old etymological sense of the word of 'specially one's own' (Lat. peculium, the private property of a child or slave).

as a man spareth his own son that serveth him: at a time viz. when he would be punishing his 'stubborn and rebellious son' (Dt. xxi. 18-21). Yahweh, in the day of judgement on the wicked, will display towards His own faithful servants the love and affection of a father towards his dutiful son.

18. And so, when the judgement breaks, ye shall return from your present scepticism (v. 14 f.), and perceive what you now deny, the distinction between the righteous and the wicked.

cometh. Properly, is coming. Cf. the note on iii. 1.

burning as an oven. The tannūr (Gen. xv. 17; Hos. vii. 4) was a portable earthenware jar, in shape like a truncated cone, heated by burning embers placed in it: see an illustration in Whitehouse, A Primer of Heb. Antiquities, p. 73; cf. EB. i. 605.

burn them up, saith the LORD of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and gambol as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they neither root nor branch. The figure changes from that of 'stubble' to that of a tree utterly destroyed by some great conflagration. Cf. Job xv. 30.

2. the sun of righteousness. A beautiful and striking figure: the deliverance of Yahweh's servants on the day of judgement will be a signal vindication of their righteousness; and so this is figured as a sun beaming forth, conspicuous to all, and bringing healing in its wings—i. e. curing them for ever from the wounds which their present trials have inflicted. The 'of' is epexegetical (= consisting in). The figure has close analogies in Ps. xxxvii. 6; Is. lxii. 1<sup>b</sup>.

arise. Properly beam forth, as regularly, when 'rise' or 'arise' is used of, or with allusion to, the sun: e. g. Dt. xxxiii. 2<sup>b</sup>, Is. lx. 1<sup>b</sup>, 2<sup>b</sup>, 3<sup>b</sup>.

in its wings. Either directly fig. for rays; or indirectly, with allusion to representations of the solar disk with wings issuing from either side, often found on Assyrian and Persian monuments: as the rays of the physical sun spread light and warmth over the earth, so will the 'wings' of the 'sun of righteousness' bring healing, i. e. new life, health, and strength to the suffering righteous Israelites. His in RV. (in the Heb. her, referring to the fem. 'sun') is an archaism for its (which never occurs in AV. of either OT. or NT.).

The Fathers interpreted the 'sun of righteousness' of Christ (hence no doubt the capital S in 'Sun' in AV.); but though the figure is a beautiful and appropriate one to apply to the Saviour of the world, this cannot be the sense intended by Malachi: for Malachi is addressing the righteous of his own time, and promises how they will soon have their righteousness vindicated, and enjoy the satisfaction of triumphing over the wicked.

shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I <sup>a</sup> do make, saith the LORD of hosts.

- 4 Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel, even statutes ashes: to which they will have been reduced by the fire of v. 1. in the day on which I do. As iii. 17.

4-6. Final exhortation to obey the Mosaic law, with a promise that Elijah will be sent to restore love and unity to the divided people, and avert if possible the threatened doom.

4. the law ('tôrâh') of Moses, my servant. Both are expressions used often by Deuteronomic writers: see (all being passages due to the compilers) (1) Josh. viii. 31, 32, xxiii. 6, 1 K. ii. 3; 2 K. xiv. 6, xxiii. 25; and (2) Josh. i. 2, 7, and 'Yahweh's servant,' Dt. xxxiv. 5; Josh. i. 1, 13, 15, and often in this book.

in Horeb. Both 'Horeb' and 'statutes and judgements' are expressions characteristic of Dt. (i. 2, 6, 19, iv. 10, 15 al. [P always says 'Sinai']; iv. 1, 5, v. 1, xii. 1, xxvi. 14 al.). The prophet is probably thinking of the moral and spiritual precepts of Deuteronomy. V. 6 seems to show that dissensions were rife among the people at the time, which might be put an end to by obedience to the principles of love and philanthropy so often inculcated in Deuteronomy.

judgements. Better, ordinances: see on Zeph. ii. 3.

5. Elijah, the great reformer, who, according to 2 K. ii, had been carried up into heaven, will reappear to prepare the people for the great day on which Yahweh comes for judgement. The expression is borrowed from Joel ii. 31; in fact the whole of v. 5<sup>b</sup> (from 'before') agrees verbatim with Joel ii. 31.

I will send. Properly, I am sending: his appearance is pictured as immediate. Cf. on iii. 1, iv. 1.

6. shall turn, &c.: i.e. shall restore unity in the divided people. A state of grave social discord and family division (cf. Mic. vii. 1-6, especially v. 6), imperilling even the existence of the community, seems to be indicated. RVm. means, 'shall turn (to God) the heart of the fathers together with (that of) the children,' &c.; but this is a forced and unnatural interpretation.

the earth. RVm. the land is preferable ; for Malachi is

with the ban. I. e. with destruction : see on Zech. xiv. 11.

Elijah was a prominent figure in later Jewish belief ; and, at least about and after the period of the Christian era, many legends were current about him. The belief that he would reappear for the moral and social reformation of Israel may have been already formed before Malachi wrote ; but whether that was the case or not, it was subsequently, and still is, firmly held by the Jews.
Thus in the NT. we read (Mk. ix. 11 f. = Mt. xvii. 10 f.), 'The scribes say that Elijah must first come' (cf. the references to Elijah in Mt. xxvii. 47 = Mk. xv. 35 'Behold, he calleth Elijah,' and John i. 21 'Art thou Elijah?' 25), and our Lord replies, 'Elijah indeed cometh first and restoreth all things,' adding in the following verse that he had already come, and they had done unto him as they listed, with evident reference to John the Baptist : cf. on iii. 1 ; and see also Mt. xi. 14 'If ye are willing to receive (it), this is Elijah, which is to come' ; Lk. i. 17 'He (John) shall go before his face in the spirit and power of Elijah, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient (to walk) in the wisdom of the just ; to make ready for the Lord a people prepared (for him).'

In the eulogy on Elijah in Eccus. xlviii. 1-11, v. 10 is based upon this passage of Malachi<sup>1</sup>. For further particulars respecting the post-Biblical Jewish beliefs about Elijah, see Edersheim, Life and Times of Jesus, ii. 703-6 ; Schürer, § 29 (ii. 440-2). The general Jewish view was, and still is, that he is to be the forerunner of the Messiah, especially for the sake of bringing peace, solving difficulties, settling legal and other disputes, deciding who were by birth entitled to belong to Israel, and calling to repentance. The Jew in Justin (c. Tryph. cc. 8, 49) says further that Elijah was expected to anoint the Messiah.

Additional Note on Nah. i. 13.

The two cuneiform tablets, found recently at Gezer, 18 miles north-west of Jerusalem (Quarterly Statement of the Pal. Explor. Fund, 1904, pp. 229 ff., 1905, pp. 206 ff.), seem to afford direct evidence of the political influence of Assyria in Palestine during the reign of Asshurbanipal (B. C. 668-625). The tablets, which date from B. C. 651, and 648 (ibid. 1905, pp. 209, 210), are contracts for the sale of land: they are both dated by Assyrian eponymies,—the second by that of a viceroy (shaknu) of Carchemish; and the sellers in one, and most of the witnesses in both, bear Assyrian names. They may be taken to show at least that there was an Assyrian colony or garrison at Gezer, if not that the country round was under Assyrian domination.

Note on the terms 'Messiah' and 'Messianic.'

In order rightly to understand these terms, it is necessary to bear in mind the proper meaning of the word 'Messiah.' 'Messiah' means 'anointed'; and in its Hebrew form it is often used of the Israelitish king as 'Yahweh's anointed' (1 S. xvi. 6, xxiv. 7, 11, &c.). The later Jews, upon the basis of this usage, designated the future ideal ruler, whom the prophets often depicted, by the title, 'the anointed king' (in Aramaic, מלִּיכָא מְשִׁיחָא). This is the origin of the term 'Messiah': it is properly applicable only to the ideal king of such passages as Is. ix. 6 f., or Zech. ix. 9; and 'Messianic' ought strictly to be limited to those prophecies of an ideal future in which the ideal 'king' is also included. The latter term is, however commonly applied, in a wider sense (cf. on Hag. ii. 7), to other prophecies of an ideal future, even though the figure of the ideal king forms no feature in them. It is, however, a serious mistake to apply the term 'Messiah' to ideal figures drawn by the prophets, which, though fulfilled by Christ, are still not figures of an ideal 'king.' Thus there is no 'Messiah,' or ideal 'king,' in Is. xl-lxvi. When a Jew is asked, Can you not see the Messiah in Is. xlix, liii, &c.? he naturally, and rightly, answers, No. The figure of the 'Righteous servant,' who combines in himself the ideal attributes of the prophet and the nation, prefigures Christ, not as a 'king,' but as a prophet; and only confusion and misunderstanding can result if this ideal figure is described as the 'Messiah.' The two ideal characters, of the prophet in Is. xl-lxvi, and of the king ('Messiah') in other prophets, were united, when the time of fulfilment came, in Christ; but in the Old Testament they are distinct (cf. Richm., Messianic Prophecy, 1891, pp. 121, 191 f., 283-8).
